HALIFAX, Thursday, April 30.

The steamship Europa, Capt. MILES, from Liverpool at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 18th, via Queenstown on the 19th inst., arrived here at 11¼ o'clock this morning. Her dates are three days later than those per the Edinburgh at New-York.

The Europa has 55 passengers for Boston and 185 for Halifax.

The steamship Bohemian, from Portland, arrived at Londonderry on the 17th, and at Liverpool on the 18th inst.

The ship Orion, from Matamoras, had arrived at Liverpool with six hundred bales of cotton and $12,000 in specie.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

INTERVIEW OF SHIPPERS AND MERCHANTS WITH EARL RUSSELL REGARDING THE MEXICAN TRADE.

On the 16th instant a deputation of shippers and merchants interested in the Mexican trade, waited on Earl Russell. The importance of the interview was considerably enhanced by an announcement being made during its progress, that while the United States Government have been seizing British vessels bound to Matamoras without any contraband of war being on board of them, Mr. ADAMS has been giving a special license for a ship to proceed from England to Matamoras, free from any interference by American cruisers, to carry supplies, which are stated to consist of arms and ammunition for the Mexicans in their war with France.

It was also shown that the interference of the Federal cruisers with the Mexican trade had the effect of enabling the Americans to establish a monopoly.

The immediate object of the deputation was to elicit from the Government some assurance of protection for the steamer Sea Queen, which is detained at Falmouth, waiting the decision of the Government.

A suggestion was made for the Government to send a mail agent in the ship who would represent an official guarantee that she was bound to the port for which she cleared. Earl RUSSELL promised to consider the proposal. He expressed much surprise on hearing of the detention of officers and emigrants on board the Peterhoff, by their being criminals nor subject to criminal law.

THE PASS TO MATAMORAS GIVEN BY MINISTER ADAMS.

A policy of insurance was attempted to be effected at Lloyds on the 16th, the vessel being furnished with certificates from Minister ADAMS, addressed to Admiral DUPONT, dated from the United States Legation, London, and stating that Messrs. HOWELL & TIPMAN had furnished Mr. ADAMS with evidence that the vessel was really bound to Matamoras with a cargo for the Mexicans, and he therefore cheerfully gave them certificates at their request.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

The Times' editorial says, that Mr. ADAMS has transferred the policy of the Mexican land frontier to English ports of shipment by a system of passes for English goods and merchandise, without which they are not to reach the Mexican coast. The safeguard he has granted evidently has a money value, since it was produced at Lloyds, in order to obtain insurance. If it was likely to reduce the premium, it gave shippers an unfair advantage over all firms to which Mr. ADAMS, from caprice or misinformation, might refuse his pass. But the commerce of England will not accept exemption that gives it freedom of action on an American ticket of leave. All the coast of Mexico is neutral territory, and by no right can one of its ports be blockaded. In continuing our commercial intercourse with Mexico, we shun even the liability to any detention or interruption. The traffic is legitimate, and cannot be carried on in the fetters of permits and certificates from the United States Legation. English merchants cannot go as suppliants to foreign Ministers for licenses to transact business. The whole proceeding is monstrous, whether as a calculation or a blunder.

The Times' City Article gives further particulars of the affair. It says:

"The gentlemen named in the pass by Mr. ADAMS, are Mr. HOWELL, an American contractor, and Gen. ZERMAN, of the Mexican army; and it was the agents of those who attempted to effect the insurance. Mr. ADAMS, in a letter, said he granted the certificates on account of the creditable object in view. That object was to ship arms and ammunition for the Mexicans in the war against France. The insurance proposed was £20,000 on the arms, and £30,000 on the ship's freight."

The Globe gives the report that Mr. ADAMS felt so chagrined at the publication of his letter to the Federal Admiral, that he visited the city to censure the indiscretion of the parties who gave it publicity.

INCREASED IRRITATION BETWEEN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The Daily News says there can be no doubt that the irritation between England and the United States is gradually increasing. There are, unquestionably, faults on both sides. But, except in the case of the Alabama, it is impossible to point to any one act which offers just ground of complaint. Earl RUSSELL is no doubt determined to do all he can to prevent another Alabama affair. But unless his efforts are supported by public opinion, they will be unavailing; and certainly, unless the temper of the country alters, it is difficult to see how it can be avoided.

THE ALEXANDRA AND OTHER MATTERS IN PARLIAMENT.

In the House of Commons on the 16th, Mr. HORSFALL gave notice of his intention to call attention to the seizure of the gunboat Alexandra at Liverpool.

Lord R. CECIL asked if it was true that spies had been sent to Liverpool to watch the dock-yards and the Confederate agents.

Sir G. GREY denied that any spies had been employed by the Government. The facts were these: Earl RUSSELL had received a letter from the American Minister, containing various allegations in reference to the infringement of the Foreign Enlistments act at Liverpool. The Mayor of Liverpool had consequently been requested to make inquiries, but no suggestion had been made as to the manner in which such inquiries should be made. He was afterward informed that the Head Constable of Liverpool had made inquiries, and that neither the Mayor nor Watch Committee had raised any objection.

In the House of Commons, on the 17th last, Mr. CURRIE gave notice of the following motion, to follow Mr. HORSFALL's, which is to come up on the 24th, in reference to the seizure of the Alexandra:

"To invite the attention of the House, from motives of national self-interest and obligations of implied international engagements, by which the British Government is called upon for a vigilant and rigid enforcement of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment act, which forbid the fabrication of ships-of-war to a belligerent Power, to be employed against another Power with which this country is at peace."

THE "GREENBACK" FORGERIES.

An investigation had taken place at Sheffield regarding the forgery of American Treasury notes in that town by two persons named HIRST and LEES, engravers and lithographers. It was shown that large amounts had been issued in fives, tens and twenty dollar notes, principally tens. The case was remanded to the 8th of May.

THE CONFEDERATE COTTON WARRANTS.

The Daily News says there is an impression that the Confederate Government cotton warrants are in circulation in England, but it is announced that such of these documents as were created previous to the Confederate loan have been reduced through the medium of that operation.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Field Marshal Lord VEATOR, an old Peninsular and Waterloo hero, died on the 17th, aged 87.

Rumor points to Lord DE GREY as the successor of Sir G. C. LEWIS, as Secretary of War.

In the House of Commons, on the 16th, Mr. GLADSTONE made the annual financial statement, as follows: Estimates of revenue for the coming year, £71,498,000; estimated expenditures, £67,749,000, showing a surplus of three and three-quarter millions of pounds.

In view of this surplus Mr. GLADSTONE proposes to reduce the duty on tea to one shilling a pound, and so to readjust the income tax, that only incomes of over £200 per annum are to be taxed in the full amount, and all below being dealt with on a regular scale. These two reductions, he estimated, will almost amount to the surplus revenue. The duty on chicory is brought up to the level of that of coffee. Sundry small changes in license fees, etc., complete the recommendations.

Mr. GLADSTONE made an elaborate speech, in the course of which he stated his belief that the increase of trade with France had more than balanced the loss of trade occasioned by the American war.

The English papers generally regard Mr. GLADSTONE's financial statement with great satisfaction, and it is believed that his measures will pass without opposition.

Mr. GLADSTONE stated that the arrangements with the Galway Steamship Company were not yet so far completed as to enable the Government to make a positive proposal or to know absolutely what would be its duty to do.

POLAND.

The Paris Pays says the dispatches of England, France and Austria were presented to the Court of Russia on the 17th.

A Vienna dispatch says the question threatened to assume greater complications.

Great excitement prevailed in Norway and Sweden regarding Poland.

The Courts of Italy and Poland had conveyed to St. Petersburgh their adhesion to the notes of the three Powers.

The Revolutionary Committee has divided Poland into twenty-three districts, each to furnish four hundred men, and pay taxes.

Since the publication of the amnesty, it is asserted that the movements of the insurgents had become more active.

Numerous engagements are reported, and an attack on Kalish was daily expected.

SPAIN.

NAPOLEON had addressed an autograph letter to the Queen of Spain, in rather pressing terms, on behalf of the imprisoned Protestants.

GREECE.

It is stated that Bavaria has entered a special protest against the occupation of the Greek throne by any King not belonging to the Bavarian dynasty.

The National Assembly of Greece had formed a new Ministry, and voted thanks to England for the proposed cession of the Ionian Islands.

A Copenhagen journal says that the difficulties which opposed the acceptance of the throne of Greece by Prince WILLIAM, of Denmark, have been removed.

THE AMERICAN QUESTION.

The following paragraph appears in the Moniteur of yesterday, and it has attracted considerable attention:

"The growing hostility of the United States toward England is exciting uneasiness in London. The last dispatches from the Washington Government have a character of increasing irritation."

The London Times is very bitter on the letter of the American Minister, Mr. ADAMS, to Admiral DUPONT, exempting a certain ship for Mexico from seizure, and calls it an arrogant assumption. It says there has been nothing equal to it since Papish bulls were issued from Rome overriding the laws of England. It adds:

"The exercise of the slightest authority by Foreign Ministers in England is not to be permitted for one moment after the assumption of power either condemning or absolving, is made known."

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

Visit of the Governor of Delaware—Secretary Seward at Yorktown—Soldier Shot in the Fortress—Cannonading on the Nansemond.

FORTRESS MONROE, Wednesday, April 29.

Gov. Wm. Cannon, of Delaware, Adjt.-Gen. S. M. Harrington, Col. Curtis, Dr. Wm. D. Nolan, E. C. Stolzenburg, Prof. Porter and Dr. Garrett, arrived from Baltimore this morning, and left at 1 P. M. for Yorktown and Gloucester Point, on a visit to the Delaware regiments stationed at those places.

The steamer Carrie Martin, Capt. WILLARD MARTIN, arrived here at 9 P. M. on the 28th inst., from Yorktown, with Hon. Wm. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, and son, and Baron GERSTEN, the Prussian Minister Plenipotentiary.

Private PARKER, of the Third New-York regiment, was shot inside of Fortress Monroe last night at 11 o'clock, by the guard on duty. PARKER was much respected by his fellow soldiers in the regiment, and at the time was passing, when it is supposed he was not aware the countersign was required, and did not halt when required to do so by the guard, whereupon the latter shot him, killing him instantly. It is regarded as a deplorable affair, but no fault of the guard. This is as near the facts as we can attain until the investigation.

Some cannonading has been going on up the Nansemond since yesterday morning, when the steamers Commerce and Star ran the rebel batteries with great credit to their commanders, Lieuts. ROBB and HORTON, both of the Ninety-ninth New-York. Our batteries on the opposite side of the river replied to the rebel batteries, to draw their attention as much as possible from the two boats, and that seems to have caused the cannonading to be kept up ever since.

OPERATIONS BY THE BLOCKADERS.

Official Reports of Recent Captures.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 30.

Rear-Admiral FARRAGUT reports to the Navy Department that on the 8th inst. he captured the steamer J. D. Clark. She had on board Maj. HIRAM of the rebel Commissary Department, who was making extensive arrangements for the crossing of cattle over to the eastern shore of the river at various places, all of which was frustrated by his capture.

The Navy Department has received intelligence of the capture of the English schooner St. George by the United States steamer Mount Vernon. The vessel was attempting to run the blockade off New Inlet, and was seized by our steamer close in with Fort Fisher. Her master acknowledged having run the blockade several times. The cargo of the St. George consisted chiefly of salt, rum and merchandise.

The schooner Nellie was captured on the 28th of March by the United States steamer South Carolina, about 25 miles east of Fort Royal, with a cargo of cotton, slightly damaged. The Captain and crew admitted having run out of Charleston a few nights previous.

On the night of the 19th, three vessels were captured whilst attempting to run the blockade off Charleston, namely: a brig and schooner laden with salt, and a sloop with cotton. They were sent North by Commodore TURNER.

The United States steamer New London reports the capture, on the 24 inst., of the British schooner Tampico, bound from Sabine Pass to the Balize, with 113 bales of cotton.

On the 13th inst., the same vessel, off Sabine Pass, picked up the officers and others of a small boat while attempting to land. Among them was Capt. CHARLES FOWLER, who commanded the steamer Josiah Bell at the time of the capture of the Morning Light. FOWLER had a commission from Major-Gen. MAGRUDER, of the rebel army, giving him exclusive control of their "squadron," as they call it, at Sabine Pass.

A gentleman who has just returned from the Army of the Potomac, brings the following report of the proceedings in that direction:

The pontoons are said to have been laid on Tuesday night and Wednesday morning across the river at Port Royal.

Yesterday morning, at daylight, the troops began to cross, and by 10 o'clock A. M., four corps d'armée are said to have crossed in safety.

Cannonading and severe firing have been heard on this side of the river.

The others have been ordered away from Aquia Creek.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LAYE WIRE, Monday Evening, April 27, 1863.

Col. TAYLOR, of the First Pennsylvania cavalry, was attacked by a party of guerrillas last night, and had a narrow escape. Being officer of the picket line extending down the Rappahannock, near Port Conway, he was riding out, accompanied by six men, for the purpose of inspecting the pickets, when a band of some thirty guerrillas suddenly fired and then charged upon them, killing one horse, capturing one prisoner, and shooting the Colonel's hat away. The men immediately put spurs to their horses and succeeded in plunging a dense forest, where they remained concealed till this morning, the pursuing party at one time coming within thirty feet of them. Col. TAYLOR made his way back to Falmouth this morning, and was arrested by our infantry pickets, and conducted to Maj. FRANKS, of the Thirty-third New-York. The Orderly who brought him in was a detached man from his own regiment. Of course he was immediately released.

INTERESTING FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

Evidences of Union Sentiment Among the People.

Experiences of a Fugitive Unionist—Indications of Weakness Among the Rebels—Prices at Richmond.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, April 25, 1863.

Among the recent arrivals of fugitives from the South, I have met with one from the Central region of North Carolina, whose career, from its singularity, is calculated to awaken curiosity and interest. Mr. BRYAN TROW is a native of Randolph County in that State, where he has resided the greater portion of his life. He is a man of profound religious convictions and experiences, is about 35 years of age, of great simplicity and sincerity of manners. He rendered himself obnoxious to the rebel authorities by the publication of a small volume, entitled A Ray of Light, or a Conservative Treatise on the Sectional Troubles, with other essays of a similar character. In this work, a copy of which he has placed in my hands, he mildly but firmly urges upon the people of the South that the act of secession was unsalled for; that it was not brought about fairly, by submitting the question to the popular vote; and that the only wise and safe course is to return to the Union. He points out, in his brief review, the acts resorted to by the secession leaders to deceive the people, and to precipitate them into the rebellion; and sustains his allegations by facts and citations, some of which are familiar to the public on this side the lines, and some of which, I believe, are new to us.

The most remarkable circumstance connected with this book, if we except the singular narrative of the religious experiences of the author, is the fact that it was printed at Raleigh during last Summer, under the author's proper name, and sent immediately to Jeff. DAVIS and his Cabinet and Congress, as well as to the Legislature of North Carolina! The printing, it is true, was done clandestinely, and the book was mailed before its character was known; but so far as the author was concerned, there was no attempt at concealment. The consequence, as might have been expected, was, that he was arrested, and for a time imprisoned at Raleigh; but he was in a few days released by VANCE, the rebel Governor, with the injunction that he was to make no further publication of his books. This he agreed to, but subsequently broke his engagement, from a strong conviction of duty, and upon the reflection that his arrest was illegal.

Although Mr. TROW has not said so, I cannot doubt that he owes his enlargement to the conviction in the minds of the rebels—founded in his averments in his book that he has received direct revelations from Heaven—that he is deranged. Yet I have no hesitation in declaring that I regard him as perfectly sane, at least as it respects all subluinary affairs, whatever may be thought of his claim to apostleship. There is this to be said, at least, in behalf of his revelations, that they are all good in themselves, so far as he has shadowed them forth, and that they have made him a profoundly earnest friend of peace, Union and humanity.

The epoch of Mr. TROW's heavenly communications is not recent—that is to say, it dates back to the year 1848, and had no special reference to the events of the present day. He was at the time about 18 years old, and at school. His story is deeply interesting, and impresses the reader with a perfect confidence in his sincerity. There can be no doubt that the visions and revelations have all the force of realities to his mind, whatever may be thought of them by third persons; and the perusal of his narrative cannot fail to inspire respect for him. He had probably, at that time, never heard the name of SWEDENBORG, and he informs me that he is still ignorant of his writings, while the spirit rappings had not then commenced, I believe.

He informs us that God had intimated to him a grand plan for the diffusion of the Gospel, and for the salvation of the whole of mankind; but he neglected repeated invitations to visit the world of light, where he was to have greater truths revealed to him, and to learn the whole plan of God; and thus he has forfeited His approbation, and has received no more revelations. He admits that he has fallen into sin, and thus wandered away from the path of light and truth. But he never gave up entirely, and still clings to his spiritual experiences, with the faith of a martyr. Among other things revealed to him, he was deeply impressed with the idea that he was called to do something for the African race. He thinks that if he had obeyed the heavenly invitation, he would have had his whole duty revealed to him in this regard; but in the absence of that perfect light, he came to the conclusion that all that was required of him was to inculcate humane treatment of Slaves. Accordingly, without deciding against the lawfulness of Slavery as an institution, he only recommends its reformation; and especially enjoins a legal prohibition of cruel whippings. I am clear, that if he ever receives the fuller revelation which he destined to receive when it was offered him, he will find that he has fallen a long way short of his duty as it regards this question. His instincts and impulses are all right, and nothing but the overwhelming pressure of a cruel and barbarous public opinion could have kept his noble heart in the fetters of Slavery. He is himself a slaveholder, but I am quite certain that that circumstance would not have weighed a feather in the mind of such a man, who has now sacrificed all for the sake of what he regards as truth and duty.

Mr. TROW informs me that the Union sentiment is strong in the central counties of North Carolina, including Randolph, parts of Chatham, Moore, and Alamance. The people combined together and saw themselves so numerous, that conscription. He has seen eight men rise armed at one house. It is rather dangerous for the conscript officers to go about alone. In making his escape he had no difficulty in finding friends in the eastern part of the State who gave him information as to the best route to pursue. He received such advice from a Confederate Captain, who, with nearly his whole company, is for the Union. He also received aid and comfort from negroes, and the last night he spent in the rebel lines was in the house of a negro slave, who the next morning ferried him across the river. There were several Union men in the last Legislature. Fifteen of them refused to vote supplies for carrying on the war, and voted against resolutions in favor of the war. Gov. VANCE told him if his book had been published before the war commenced it might have done good, but that now it is too late. From another source I learn that VANCE, who commanded a regiment at Newbern before he was elected Governor, and before the place was captured, freely declared that he was no Secessionist, and that he took up arms because North Carolina required it. But the truth is that North Carolina did not require it; and he and others like him are merely the tools of JEFF. DAVIS and his conspirators, who have ever been the Unionists of North Carolina in contempt. Gov. STANLY had many opportunities of ascertaining the sentiments of the people of North Carolina. He states that the feeling of hatred of South Carolina is intense, while the South Carolinians in turn detest the North Carolinians almost as much the Yankees.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE.

Advance of the Rebel Lines in Front of Gen. Rosecrans.

BOASTS OF THE REBEL COMMANDERS.

MURFREESBORO, Thursday, April 30.

The near approach of the rebel forces has afforded opportunities to deserters to come into our lines. Seventeen came in to-day. They confirm the report of the rebel advance to a point north of Duck River. Some say PEEK's troops have moved eight miles north of Shelbyville, on the road to Murfreesboro, and that HARDEE was at War Trail; BRAGG at Bell Buckle. They say it is BRECKINRIDGE who is at Manchester, and speak of him as commanding a force. Rumors of reinforcements are confirmed, but the statements generally look like exaggeration. Deserters say the rebel Commanders talk boldly and loudly of their intention to drive ROSECRANS out of Tennessee. These men get a quarter ration of bacon, but plenty of meal.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES

WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 30.

THE RETURNING REGIMENTS TO HAVE THEIR ARMS.

The Secretary of War has acceded to the request of Senator MORGAN and Gen. SCHENCK, relative to mustering out the thirty-eight New-York regiments, whose term of service shortly expires. An order will be issued, to-morrow, that the regiments retain their arms until they reach home, when they will be immediately mustered out and paid all arrears and bounty money.

THE INTERNAL REVENUE.

The falling off in revenue from excise, from the estimates made by Commissioner BOUTWELL, upon data at the time correct and justified by the statistics of the country, has been frightfully great, and it is still diminishing. The cause of this is the very general neglect to comply with many of the requirements of the Revenue Act in regard to the use of stamps, and the prodigious extent to which stamps once used are fraudulently detached from the instruments to which they were affixed, and used again. The business of collecting stamps, even canceled postage stamps, is organized in all great cities, and their resale for use is a commerce of large proportions. Commissioner LEWIS is actively exploring this new villainy, and maturing plans that shall at once punish its authors and effectually protect the revenue.

FAST DAY.

Fast was observed with great strictness here. The Government offices were all closed, the publication of the newspapers suspended, stores shut, and divine services were performed in all the churches. In the evening Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND preached a sermon of pronounced Anti-Slavery and Anti-Secession character.

THE NATIONAL FAST.

ITS LOCAL OBSERVANCE.

OUR NATIONAL SINS AND THEIR PUNISHMENT.

In conformity with the President's Proclamation of the 20th of March, yesterday was very generally set apart by the citizens of New-York and Brooklyn as an occasion for fasting and prayer. The public buildings and private stores were closed, and business of every nature was suspended for the day. The churches of all denominations, save the Roman Catholic, were open, and in the majority of them appropriate services were held. The attendance upon the religious services was unusually large, and the congregations seemed impressed with the deep solemnity of the occasion and a consciousness of its necessity.

Sermons of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

An immense congregation assembled at Plymouth Church, yesterday, to hear what Rev. H. W. BEECHER might say concerning the propriety of fasting and praying, before he goes to Europe. Before preaching, Mr. BEECHER announced that Miss DOUGLASS would speak, on Saturday night, at the Cooper Institute, and administered a caustic and truthful rebuke to the Directors of the New-York Academy, who, in their purity of purpose, refused her permission to speak in that edifice, because she was "a woman, and spoke on politics." He also congratulated the people of Brooklyn on the fact that they, too, were blessed with a semi-bred set, who, on the same ground, refused the lady the use of their Academy.

Upon this, Prof. RAYMOND, one of the Directors of the Academy, rose from his seat, and quietly remarked that the rev. gentleman was in error, and that so far as the Brooklyn Academy was concerned, the statement was untrue.

At this, Mr. CHARLES GUNN left his seat, and informed that the fact was as Mr. BEECHER had stated, and that gentleman then said that while he was corrected by one of the Directors, the Director was in turn corrected by one who ought to know, but that doubtless the papers would settle their little difference, and in the meantime, Miss DOUGLASS would speak at the Cooper Institute.

The fact of the matter is, that the Academy is engaged for every night in this and the coming week with the exception of three nights, of which Mrs. Jane Woolf has the refusal.

Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.—Isaiah, 62: 10.

The prophet saw a great way further down into the future than we can yet, and there are intimations already, glowing predictions of the condition of the people and of the nationalities of the earth that are far beyond our comprehension and our faith. It seems strange to hear a voice of authority and solemnity sounding from so far back when as yet there were none of these things, declaring as a part of divine sovereignty, the great Christian truth of democracy. Then, when jealous sovereigns reigned everywhere; then, when the nobles leagued together, and oppressed all that the monarch spared; then, when the great men and the rich men wealthy surrounded themselves by position in the sight of God according to the weight of their treasure or the corruption of their luxuries—to hear the voice in those early periods sounding out, Prepare ye the way of the people—not of the Government, not of rulers, not of monarchs, but of the people—cast up the highway, for there has never been a path made for them. Roads had been for kings to walk in, and roads had been for strong and rich men to walk in; but they had got to cut a new road with their engineering, for there was no place for the common people to walk with honor and dignity and a condition of protection. Cast up the highway, gather out the stones, that they should not stumble—lift up a standard for the people. Brave old prophet! Grand utterance! and how long that seed lay buried without a sing up! Blessed be God, that we live in a time when we begin to see some of the fruit of the harvest of that seed!

This is a nation of the people. Our history and circumstances point us out as, above all others, raised up to expound and to exhibit the prosperity of the free, intelligent common people. No other history than this can account for that fact. Put together the varied threads of seemingly Heathenish sources; but if you take this, the whole pattern of our history glows out symbolically and beautifully. This seems to have been the Divine purpose, projected all the way down through the well-flowing record, repeated and repeated, to call out at last, in effect and in history, and bear witness to the fulfillment of the decree and the command. There have been eminent and thoroughly-tested examples of government by monarchies, limited and absolute, and little remained to be learned of the effect of government, in so far as it was conducted by these forms of government. We have had nobles and special orders of every form and combination, and whatever could be done for the good of the people by such means of government had been found out, and it is not likely that there will be any experiment that will add to the knowledge and the experience of the world in that direction. We have had also priestly governments, and we know how much good to the people by theocracies—and we know that it is precious little. Under all rules, with and without commerce, warlike or peaceful, placed among civilized and in savage nations, we have had these various governments tried in various ways, until there is no longer any need of them for the sake of finding out what either kind can do. There is nothing new respecting them to be discovered or hoped for. There has also been an attempt at development, in early times, a free Government. There were elements of democratic government in the tribes; they were but single elements, but no consistent whole. All early attempts at free government were not sufficient to demonstrate either the true nature or excellence of free governments. There is much to be learned on this subject. They were based more on the liberty of the State, without the elevation of its citizens, than upon an intelligent doctrine of freedom by the elevation of individual citizens. The liberty of Greece, the liberty of ancient republics, was a liberty of the community, a very different thing from the liberty of the individuals of the community, and so, necessarily, of the nation itself.

They took hold at the wrong end, which is not surprising. In that early day, men naturally borrowed from monarchical Governments the belief that the State was worth as much more than any other man in it, as the whole is worth more than a single unit, and they did not discover that the way to make the whole worth anything is to make each unit as high as possible. There was lacking these fundamental religious ideas of personal virtue, or self-government, or intelligence, without which there can be no such thing as regulated freedom. There were not yet found out either those instruments of Government by means of which the rights of State could be secured, the laws maintained and the rights and liberties of the citizens guarded; for the institutions of liberty are as indispensable, almost, as the ideas of liberty itself. Courage is the only thing that makes armor good for anything, but all the courage in the world is good for little unless men have arms of offense and defense; and, without the spirit of liberty, no government is good for anything. It is a thing of growth, of progress, and as in the volcanic period, in the early geologic periods, there were many growths that perished, preparing the way for other growths upon the same soil; so, step by step, we have come to a soil which is capable of bearing Republics. There were insuperable reasons why that experiment of the liberty of the people could not be tried elsewhere than here. Europe was preoccupied by other Governments, and to plant liberty there was like planting corn among the forests of America. And there could not have been a consistent liberty in Europe, except by the most violent, radical and sudden changes; and, amid the remnants of so many laws and customs, it would have been a subject of dispute whether it was the principle of liberty that was introduced, or the principle already there that brought forth the benefit. It is doubted to this day whether it is the common people that make the State rich, or the State that makes the common people rich. Nor was there a condition of the common people on which this liberty could be built. There is nothing in the world more certain than that a Republican Government requires the best people in their best estate to make it permanent and possible. There is no other government in the world that demands so much of its people, no other that gives so much back to them. It requires the largest amount of the intelligence and the moral tone and feeling; it requires that they should give to it that which is most manly, and most manly under the most correct conditions; but we find no such conditions to begin an experiment of liberty to have existed there. God had something better for the race; He had saved out a sphere for the grand experiment of the liberty of the common people. He sent hither, first, to this newly opened continent, a few. Men of intense and almost fanatical faith in human rights and liberty came hither, and were suffered to come in small numbers, and have compelled and almost undisputed possession of the community. The early Colonial or Ante-Revolutionary period may be considered the first step of Republicanism. The obscurity and the contempt of [illegible] in the eyes of Europe, was of itself another instance of the Providential wisdom and goodness in that God, by the Revolutionary storm, hatched out the day of liberty and its possibility; had there been given to them the spirit of malign foresight by which they should have seen what the possibilities of strength were, to be here developed in the days of our early weakness, they would have tampered with us, they would have settled upon us institutions that we could not have spoken off; but they let us alone until it was too late to meddle. The sympathies of the monarchical element of Europe are against us. I mean against the free people of the North. We had allies, and we had enemies where we least expected them. While we were watching the bears lest our enemies should come with [illegible] on their heads, they were hatching in our swamps and bayous, out of our own morasses we have had our adversaries, and not out of the great sea.

Now, we are to judge of our duties, of their fulfillment, and so of our delinquencies and of our sins, and of the chastisement of this nation, and of its mission among the peoples of the earth. We should look things right in the face, and so speaking of them, I divest myself of all special relation to parties and [illegible] and ask you to do the same. There was a time—it was the inspiration of some generations of our former ancestors—that this nation was raised upon be the right hand of God in this world. It is a grand national fact, but there is reason to fear that, from a variety of causes, the spirit has declined, and that our people have come to view this nation almost wholly from a worldly point of view, in reference to their own immediate good. For fifty years this nation has plunged into enterprise and gained a prosperity which have almost materialized it. In some respects this course of prosperity has been beneficial, for there cannot be a prosperous people that have no enterprise. Lassitude breed diseases, running streams breed health, and a nation must be active, laborious. We have had prosperity, but I fear that it will be found that we have consumed conscience, conscience, and that there has been attending it the substitution for moral qualities of commercial qualities, and that it is rapidly developing from it a plutocracy and the setting of success by the power of wealth. Where wealth has been earned by honest industry, it becomes the symbol of a man's virtues; and where it has been inherited, it becomes the insignia and the sign of his good desert; but when rich men concentrate and employ their wealth as a power of influence, they become a plutocracy, already beginning to show itself in this country; and to-day I think the most alarming danger of this nation is the power and facilities of bribery. Wealth corrupts legislation—it buys and sells its functions. Albany, Harrisburgh, the municipal legislation of New-York City, need no naked nor commentaries. If we look abroad, the tendency goes beyond the [illegible] in every nation in Europe. If we maintain liberty and truth triumph over all its intestine enemies, the sun will rise at midnight there. If we succeed, there is not a dungeon in Europe that will not have songs in the night; there is not a captive in Europe that will not soften his chains with tears when he hear that liberty is triumphant once more. If the old Stars and Stripes are borne again in every part of this land, and over all the world in our national ships, and in everywhere the blood-washed ensign of liberty, then the millennial day will dawn over the nations. Then the bats and the birds of night will fall again hooted and shriek and hide themselves, and the eagle come forth to sail to the heavens, everywhere the symbol of power and of liberty. In connection with this I must speak to you of the slave, and I claim the right, in the name of the Lord God, to call him my brother. His tears are my tears; his wrongs are my injury. If he had been held to labor for reasons of political economy, I might have thought that was wrong; if he had been held to an abstemious diet, I might have said that was wrong; I might have would have said that great wrong and injustice. But we find that there is a white skin has never been permitted to call himself "Mine." The statutes in all the Slave States are so between sin and manhood, and declare that he is no longer man, but only chattel, and subject to the absolute control of him that owns him. Talk about the abuse of the slave system! I tell you it is just in the power of fiendish possibility to abuse it. When the statute says the slave is no longer a man, and by one legislative blast of lightning takes manhood from him, there can be no further abuse; and to-day, Republican law blazing the infamous light abroad, declares in the midst of this great Republic four millions of men to be denuded of their manhood. I shall not be sorry that I have denounced Slavery, that I have pleaded for the oppressed in the last Great Day, and every vote, every testimony that I have made for justice and for liberty, will I will rise up in that blessed moment and be sweeter to you than thrones are to the ambitious. I am hurt in my soul that religion itself has been corrupted, and that the pulpit of my brethren and our religion, by their silence, or by direct positive teaching, have been perverted into justification of this system. I am sorry for the poor outcasts of New-York; I am sorry when I see men give vent to a sentiment—for them I have only stronger than anything else; but I will confess to you that there is one class toward whom I feel cold of pity and void of compassion. When I see holy and reverend Presidents of colleges that are spending their years to pervert the minds of those under their instructions, and make them believe that it is right to hold men in Slavery; when I behold men pleading with God himself for the destruction of his own image, I have no heart, I am adamant, I curse them. I fain would think some of them have repented in this life for the salvation of their souls; some, I fear, have died without repenting. Pray, pray, that you may not be surprised by such an eternity, nor such an awful terror of torment as they must have resting on them forever and forever, gnawing their hearts, gnawing their conscience. They have taken the blood of the atonement, that they might sanctify and seal men over to the devil.

I have attempted to fix your mind with intensity and directness and simplicity upon the great theories which we as Americans ought to think of on such a day as this. The days are coming to try us, to test our Christianity. God has opened the prison door, and we have a great responsibility resting upon us. I tremble when I think of the nation. I know not what shall befall us if we succeed. I know no longer if I repent, and cannot tell whether we can trust the people to adjudicate the great questions of justice that are before them.

Sure I am that if this people are true to the faith of their fathers, there will come emancipation and liberty. We can stand, if we repent of the sin of oppression, if we can look at man as our brother, and treat him as such. The signs of the times are growing gradually better. But a few months ago you could look all round the horizon and you could not tell which way east north, west nor south. But I think we can tell now which way the sun is going to come. It is not risen, but there is twilight in the heavens. It is the sun coming, and it is the dawning sun of liberty. The sun is rolling up our orb again, and the long line of light is steadily coming, and the mountains are growing stronger against the east, and already we begin to see the bright symbol of American and enduring liberty. But more signs are in the air—day is coming; awake! awake! for sakes the night is at hand! Let us, then, up thy duties, chiefly those which concern virtue, purity, justice, truth and religion; call upon the name of God, and thy sun, rising in mid-day, shall stand a thousand years and never go down.

The above, being only a brief sketch, can give the reader but an imperfect idea of a discourse which, to say, the least, was more than usually replete with illustration, argument and pathos.

Sermon of Rev. Dr. Adams.

The morning services at the Madison-avenue Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. WM. ADAMS, Pastor, were unusually interesting. The vast edifice was crowded, and the congregational singing excellent. The pulpit was occupied by Dr. ADAMS, Dr. FERRIS, Rev. Prof. SEARS, Prof. CROSBY, and Dr. SCHENCK, all of whom, in one way or another, assisted in conducting the services, which were purposely interspersed with more than the customary amount of singing and prayer, together with the reading of the President's [illegible] conviction of [illegible] cannot be [illegible] people? If [illegible] projected the [illegible] in its obe[illegible] people, children [illegible] ment devotion their thoughts to God, imploring his blessing, invoking divine aid, and relying their entire dependence upon him, what blessings might we not anticipate to result from this service? The truths embodied in this document admit that there is such a thing as national life, and character, and national organic growth and development. Those who live at any particular time pass away, but the nation lives. Pharoah died, but Egypt lived. Cyrus and Darius passed away, but Persia continued. God punishes nations for their sins, and he punishes them in this world. Jeroboam will be called to account for all his Wehemdowe iniquities in inducing the tribes to revolt, yet the consequences of that great revolt are to be visited upon the nation to which he belonged in this present life. But what do we mean by national sins? If we mean to ask a pestiferous assembly, some would say Slavery; some, intemperance; some, Sabbath-breaking; idolatry of wealth. It may be this, or that; but carefully, correctly, what do we mean by national sins? Certainly those are national sins which are committed by our national rulers, the official representatives of the people. If this has been so in other nations, where the monarchs were hereditary, how much more true is it in ours, where the rulers are chosen by the people. Official acts which are contrary to the great laws of God, they are the a peculiar sense to be regarded as national sins. Those sins are national which are so generally practiced as to be characteristic of the people. Many of them I might specify, but I am not to dwell at this time with those things that lie upon the surface. Of what account is it for us to dwell upon the ripples that lie upon the outside or visible surface of life, and not think of those principles which are deep down in our nation? What would you say if I should call your attention only to this one fact—Have we not almost deified this principle of personal liberty? Has not this development itself into an excessive selfishness and individualism, thus setting itself against authority, human and divine? And, when you come to combine that with all the opportunities which have been given us in the Providence of God, which must be an abundant confidence before us, and such resources to be developed, it will take the form of love of money, of cupidity, of ambition, and a desire of attainment, which will blossom into intense materialism, dishonesty, corruption, or anything and everything but pure Christian patriotism. Now what a grand purpose this day will subserve, if, looking down into our own hearts, and the hearts of the nation, we should touch this great fact and should humble ourselves before God, acknowledging Him as the power that rules over us, and to whom we are to be subject in every thought and imagination. Great religious forces are behind us. We have had one religious age in our country. We desire that it may be renewed, and that God may be recognized as our great President; that we shall not dare to put forth our own will in opposition to his. We must have a theocracy recognizing the supremacy of God. For one, I see no hope for this country of our venturing upon such tremendous experiments as we have—but in that radical change of the human soul by the power of God's word and Spirit that shall make us all obedient children of God, and disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ. When you have listened to those Sabbath-day inculcations, you have perhaps a superficial idea that religion is the soothing and consoling agency to come to upon the weak or the dying alone; but it is the foundation of States, the formation of character. It is the only foundation for our institutions, for our living republican self-government. We must be religious people, thoroughly versed in this great law of obedience to our Lord and Saviour. God blessed the United States of America so as to bring us to a better, practical, purer and simpler religion. Then, indeed, we shall feel the fear and favor of the Lord, and not if we look upon any particular measure and keep out of mind this radical change of human soul. We shall be greatly deceived if we think that, by the removal of Slavery, we shall of course immediately go to the end of time and be as the sun and moon shall endure. How greatly are we deluded; for, remove the social and political questions to be solved, and still there remains the great human question, the subjection of the soul, the individual will of every citizen of the country to the law of our God. Let us pray that this day may be so observed that these great ideas shall be revived, extended and perpetuated throughout our country.

Prof. Passmore followed in a similar train of thought; and, after singing and prayer, the meeting closed with the benediction, pronounced by Prof. Cæsar.

Sermon of Rev. Dr. Bellows.

At All Souls' Church a large congregation assembled to listen to the Fast Day sermon of Dr. Bellows. Prayer was offered by Dr. Osgood, and hymns appropriate to the peculiar character of the day were sung. Dr. Bellows selected for his text the 29th, 30th and 31st verses of the 5th Chapter of Jeremiah, and began by alluding to the necessity our country has for prayer, and the eminent fitness of the President's setting apart such a day as this. Every nation has abundant cause to confess its sins and supplicate the Divine forgiveness; but ours has peculiar reason to acknowledge its unfaithfulness. For we have grievously sinned against light, humanity and love. With all our advantages of national liberty, of a free religion, of schools and the pious example and teachings of our fathers, in all these so highly favored above other nations, it is not enough that we surpass foreign peoples, and even the best of them, in general morality. The question is, are we in any fair degree equal in our piety to our talents, opportunities and blessings? We have enjoyed, as a people, singular advantages, and our responsibility is relative. This American people must either be the best or the guilty most people on God's earth. There can be no doubt that for twenty-five years past the American people has been making progress in everything rather than morals and piety. In all arts and sciences there has been rapid advancement. We have become a more cultured, more tasteful, more quiet and more graceful a people. Yet, although there is more good taste, good sense and decorum, there is no more principle. In respect of morals there is no corresponding advance. Nay, there has rather been a degeneration, and sufficiently so to deserve and invoke the solemn warnings of Providence. These twenty-five years have been essentially a time of externalities, of compromises and concessions. Everyone has been seeking to make money, and everything has become subjected itself to the money-maker. In politics, in theology, art, society, religion, there is less real sturdy principle than there was a quarter of a century ago—less earnestness, less faith, less devotion. As a consequence, we have little substantial reading, almost no earnest poetry; we have twenty times as many artists, and a hundred times as many patrons of art, but fewer earnest and devoted in their profession. We have splendid churches; but where are the saints? We have eloquent preachers; but where is the old doctrinal strength? Religion has degenerated into an ethical system. It is polite, civil, gentle, popular, whereas it ought to be uncompromising, stern, unbending. The devotion of the people to money-making has withdrawn their attention from National questions, has given the control of State, city and county elections to grog-shops and corner groceries, has kept fit men out of Congress, and has suffered the South to gain and hold its imperious rule in the politics of the country. Another general cause of demoralization is the institution of Slavery. More than we are aware it has polluted our whole political system and undermined the morals of the whole people. We of the North have been bred to regard it with kindness. We had accommodated ourselves to this sinful institution in commerce, in literature and religion, until it had extended its corrupting influence over them all. What effect it has had upon the South we have but lately learned. Now we see how it has so barbarized a people as to lead them madly to sacrifice themselves and a national existence to satisfy a spirit of revenge. Slavery has set fire to her own prison-house. Out of the annals of American Indians there never was a more savage immolation of all the rights of a people made for the inordinate and revengeful feelings. Rather than yield to the most paternal Government that ever existed, they are burning cities, laying waste their fields, so that a hundred years' toil will not recover them to life and fertility, and sacrificing the very institution which they have so fiercely spared.

Dr. Bellows proceeded to show the utter impossibility of success to the South, how delay was their ruin, and how victories could only weaken and finally exhaust them. The time of real danger to the Government had passed. Our sole danger was that the rebellion would succeed at once. After one year it was only a question of time as to when it should finally yield to the superior power of the North. The great necessity is a willingness on the part of the loyal people to throw out of the calculation the element of time. They must determine to prosecute the war until final and complete success is reached—be it one year, or five years or ten, or for our natural life. The moment the people abandon every idea but this, we shall remove the obstacle to a speedy and successful result. It is a mere sum in moral and mental arithmetic. If does not even depend upon victories. To wait is for us to conquer.

Sermon of Rev. Dr. G. B. Cheever.

"He that rules over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God."

In supporting the proposition that justice is the sole foundation of government, Mr. CHEEVER said that the justice of God is the attribute which was most valued. If, in the present struggle, the justice of God should not be manifested, and his promise of it fulfilled, both the law and the penalty would be disregarded and treated with impunity. Governments that set up the assumed right of governing on any other principle than that of justice, would be punished and brought to an end. God had entered on an era and demonstration of discipline with us as a nation and a Government, which the world would remember to its dying day. We had put forth a declaration, in the hearing of all the nations, that the slaves in rebellion are now and forever free, and shall be protected in such freedom. If God saw that that Proclamation was only a signatic sham for the proscribing of foreign intervention, and the gain of sympathy on false pretences, and that a party in power, and [illegible] was plotting otherwise by [illegible] of our Union may be [illegible]

[illegible] Slavery, punish[illegible] certainly to enslave and the [illegible] detestable as he would hug the rig[illegible] and his wife and babes against any [illegible] assassins. It might have been supposed that by this time in the world's history, after so many and prolonged and vast experiments—after all the racking and torture of the world on the wheel of atheistic experiments six thousand years—two thousand of them beneath the light of Christianity—that in this country, and under such a Constitution, men would have come to their senses, far enough, at least, to recognize and acknowledge what be the very first principles of even natural justice and right.

The second propositions considered by Dr. CHEEVER was our departure from justice, the cause of God's anger and of all our calamities. The effect of the rebellion and the war upon Slavery was so manifest from the outset, that every generation should have been made for freedom. The whole nation had exclaimed that Slavery is doomed. Why had we not arranged our laws for freedom? If the Fugitive Slave law had been repealed, there would have been a great gulf fixed against the possibility of any compromise with Slavery. If emancipation were contemplated, what madmen to suffer the Fugitive Slave law to remain! The speaker next argued that a return to justice was the condition of the renewal of God's mercy.

Sermon of Rev. Dr. Sterrs.

The reverend doctor announced as his text the 107th Psalm, from the 11th to the 14th verses. He commenced by saying the day and the service in which they were engaged were significant, the observance of the day was significant as was its appointment by the President; and so, also, was the neglect to observe it by so great a multitude. Prior to the commencement of the present war two national tests had been observed, and only two, that he remembered. One was when the executive head of the Government had been stricken by death, and the other when the cholera, in epidemic form threatened the land—then the nation had with propriety been called to recognize God, and ask him to remove the scourge from us. Since the commencement of the war we had been called upon to fast and pray. And on the present occasion it was a significant fact that we were not called simply to pray for victory nor to lament defeat; but in the prospect of victory to remember our sins and ask forgiveness.

We were quick to recognize victories and defeats, but slow to feel responsible for sin and consequent disaster. Therefore was it that God sent calamities, that we might come to a knowledge of ourselves, and looking from under the shadow of calamity, see that God is king over all. For the same reason did he reveal himself to his chosen people on Mount Sinai, in thunder and lightning—then by fear and tribulation did he recall a nation to himself. But there were some sins against God which the nation acknowledged. The sins we did not recognize were, first, pride and an inordinate self-esteem. We could say proudly, as well as with humility, that we were free-born—that our freedom dated back to the German woods—Runnymede was ours, and Magna Charta and the Reformation. And we had a noble past to look back to on this continent; from planting colonies to rearing States and cementing them in union and freedom.

The second sin we recognized was an immoderate regard for material wealth and mental power. We had given these an extraordinary value. We were in the habit of estimating a man's value by his wealth. "He is worth a million" gave a man value, while if he were really worth anything, the whole world could not buy him. Then we were in the habit of placing men in prominent and responsible positions because of their capacity to impress their opinions upon others, and not because of their mental, not of their moral power. We had then been taught to look to the maker, and not to the instrument, for what we required. The strength of our fathers lay, not in their mental so much as in their moral power. The third recognized sin was a disregard for the poor and the weak, as exhibited in our treatment of the Indian and the African. The last sin recognized was a disregard of God and his laws, and for all of the thirteen relations by God ordained we might see how little wealth and mental power could do to save us from the wrath of him. The cut of the nation had been dealt. God had spoken in the "still small voice," but the nation had not heard him. Now he had spoken in the thunders of a cannonade, and there were none so deaf but could hear him. We must recognize God before he would give us tranquility. And there was encouragement in the fact of our tribulations, because God labored with those who could be made fit for his services, and we might hope that it was to make us more fitted for his services that he now disciplined us. If we were faithful to the lessons God had now given us, our children would then give thanks for all he had given either of prosperity or adversity. There was a large congregation present, and the discourse was listened to with marked attention.

Sermon by Rev. S. H. Tyng, D. D.

The service at St. George's Church was of a deeply impressive character, and was participated in by a large congregation. The text selected was the 122d Psalm, 1st, 2d, 5th and 6th verses. After alluding to the destruction of Jerusalem, Dr. TYNG proceeded to show wherein our own people resembled in some particulars the people of that ancient city. Touching upon the subject of loyalty, he declared that for a man to say he has no loyalty, it is to say he has no honesty. The child's love of his home, and the father's love of his family, was the patriot's love of his country. He would not consider himself, his family nor his property, safe within the grasp of a man who had renounced the obligations of loyalty for the purpose of adopting plans to overthrow the dominion of that authority which had furnished him all his social enjoyment and success, and under the protection of which he had peacefully lived and grown up. If was his intention to speak fearlessly and independently on the subject of loyalty, and that none might be taken unawares, he had previously announced his intention. His loyalty was not confined to a single State; but extended over the whole continent of America. He would never give his consent to its dismemberment, and desired not to live to see disunion upon any terms that could be devised. Still less would he recognize a combination of political intriguers to overthrow the established Government. He had roamed in other lands, and had not affected to despise their many advantages; but he had ever returned to his native land with renewed gratification and pride. Every part of his native land was his, and he loved every part equally well. South Carolina and Georgia was his as much as Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Massachusetts had planted her seed in every part of the country—a seed that would grow and bear good fruit. To separate this land, to parcel it out to a set of traitors, was a transaction to which he would never, as one citizen, give his consent. He would never yield the right of his home to the power of adversity. Political questions and national debts were nothing unless our country was preserved. Let the land of our fathers be transmitted unbroken, solid, entire, untarnished to our children who succeed us. Some men had called the Constitution a mass of glittering generalities, but they had no affinity with the purpose for which it was designed and destined to be exercised. The fathers of the present generation, even on the very soil of Slavery, testified to the infamous curse of human bondage. Dr. TYNG then cited the authorities of WASHINGTON, JEFFERSON, MADISON, MONROE and other statesmen, to show how heartily they disapproved of the system of Slavery. We were certainly in the midst of a war for freedom, and it was the greatest and grandest contest which the world had ever seen. Slavery at last had received its inevitable destruction. Its reconstruction could never be effected without a greater contest and more terrible scenes of violence than those we are now called on to witness. The Constitution was next alluded to by the eminent preacher, who closed his able discourse with an appeal to his hearers to stand unflinchingly by the principles which our fathers endeavored to establish.

Sermon of Rev. I. S. Kalloch.

At the Leight-street Baptist Church, Rev. I. S. KALLOCH introduced the devotional exercises of the congregation by reading selections of Scripture appropriate to the day. It is always proper to pray; but it is essential now. God will be inquired of by us. It is very appropriate that such a day as this should be set apart, and given to our country. Let us devote it well and wisely. Let us look over the ground and see where we stand. Let us first, try to appreciate more thoroughly the importance of the contest. Everything is involved in it. It is a contest between two civilizations, or rather between civilization and barbarism; and its issue bears upon the fate not only of slaves, but of freemen; not only of black men, but of white men; not only of America, but the world. The point in dispute is not one of political platforms, or the policy of an Administration.—It is a simple question of civil life or death. Whether we are to continue a free people, or go down beneath the wave, and become the butt and jeer of all the dynasties of the world; whether we are to be a lighthouse on the shore, or a buoy on the waters; all this is involved. The consolidation of a Southern Empire with Slavery as its chief corner-stone—with filibustering, privateering and border strife—would be a surrender of all that has been won in the past—would be a relapse into a condition much worse than that from which our fathers emerged through seas of blood. Can any one doubt the disastrous effects of Southern supremacy? The South is the type and asserter of Oriental Absolutism—the defender of the divine right of tyrants. We are fighting in the noblest cause in which weapons can be wielded, or armor girded on, or treasure lavished, or willing blood poured out like water. But we should not only appreciate the importance of the contest.

Second—We must have confidence in the administration of it. We are a serious people. We talk a man up in the skies to-day and thrust him down to hell to-morrow. To-day Gen. MCCLELLAN is a god—to-morrow he is a fool. The truth is, he is neither. There has been fault found enough to sink dozen Cabinets in a weaker Government. It is true that rulers and Commanders much expect to be [illegible] [illegible] Much [illegible] here to them, [illegible]

[illegible] severe to pun[illegible] failure, receiving the [illegible] ear, blaming everything they see [illegible] nothing is being done unless they see it. The people that wishes to be well governed and nobly led, must be just and generous—must be as zealous to reward as it is vigilant to exact full and righteous service. It is impossible but that offences will come, mistakes be made; but our leaders see more and know better than we do; they are at least men of average intelligence, they are our appointed authority, and it is the divine command, as well as our highest interest, to respect them, confide in them, pray for them. Third—We should learn to be patient under defeat. We must wade through deep seas to this National Baptism; we must lose brave officers and heroic men; we shall encounter temporary reverses and disasters. We must learn patience. It took seven years to fight the Revolutionary war. Our fathers fought themselves poor, taught themselves barefooted, and yet never grumbled half so much as we, were, if it were not for the lying newspapers. We would hardly know we are in a war. We must learn, that if defeat follows defeat, and misfortune succeeds misfortune, it is only to try us, to discipline us, to prepare us for success. We are too easily discouraged. Bull Run scared us almost to death. It is the duty of the hour to anticipate a long struggle and prepare for it. Energy is enervated by flattering pictures of speedy victories. There is danger of collapse if these pictures prove to be "castles in the air." We want the negro's idea of perseverance, "Catch hold, hold on, and never let go."

Finally, we should learn to pray more. We do not pray enough. Our fathers were driven to the sanctuary and the Bible; we have taken down the sanctuary and land the papers. God will be acknowledged in the earth. The nations that will not serve Him shall perish. Let us look to Him and pray for our President, that he may be sustained under his tremendous burdens; for our Generals, that they may be kept from the steel of the assassin and from death in stricken battle; for our soldiers, that their heads may be covered in the day of battle, and for the poor slave, that God in His Providence may so make the wrath of man to praise Him, that every yoke of oppression may be broken, and not a slave be left to clank his chains in all our borders!

Sermon of Rev. J. R. W. Sloane.

Rev. Mr. SLOANE preached from the following text:

"For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."

1. We have disobeyed and dishonored God.

1. We have no recognition of His name or authority in the Constitution of the United States.—This fact is established by the simple reading of that document. If that Constitution should be lost, and dug up after some thousands of years from the ruins of some one of the numerous buildings under which it has been buried, no man would be able to tell whether it was the Constitution of a Christian or a pagan land, from any word or sentence found in it.

2. We have not recognized the Holy Scriptures as the fundamental law of the land.—The prevalent conception, even among Christians, is that the Bible is for the individual. Nothing could be more utterly mistaken. A large portion of the inspired volume is taken up in prescribing the duties and obligations of nations. Jehovah is our great law-giver. His law binds man in every relation of life.

3. We have not recognized the Lord Jesus Christ as King of Nations. This has never been done, so far as we know, by this nation, in any form. The claims of Messiah have been entirely ignored. We are taught to pray "Thy Kingdom come;" we are commanded to honor the Son even as we honor the Father—to kiss the Son lest he be angry, and we perish from the way. He will smite us with the rod of his anger until we give to him the honor which is his due.

II. We have disobeyed to our fellow-men their inalienable rights.—That Slavery is an inalienable right of the race is as certain as that the war exists.

1. We sinned in admitting Slaveholding States into the Union.—Slavery existed, I believe, in all the thirteen original States, in some form or other, with one exception. Nevertheless, in many it was in the process of gradual extinction, if there did there find a people of equal rights had refused to enter into the Union with any State that did not pledge itself to abolish it at the earliest possible moment, the hydra would have been strangled in its cradle, the Constitution of rights, and the present bloody war would have been averted.

2. We have sinned in granting concessions to Slavery in the Constitution.—We have no time to discuss constitutional theories. That the Constitution was formed to secure liberty is plain; that there are in it fatal concessions to Slavery is just as plain; these concessions to a crime and a curse are a sin; they are one many lightning-rods attracting and bringing down upon the fabric of Government God's wrath to blast and destroy.

3. We have sinned in permitting the Government to be administered in the interests of Slavery.—Slavery is the phantom that has held the reins and driven the chariot of State over since we were a Government.

4. We have sinned in not fasting every day in not making a final end of this heinous iniquity.

In vain we fast for Sabbath-breaking, for luxury, for political corruption, for profane swearing, for any or all of our National sins, while this great iniquity is unrepented of and unforsaken.

Why is the hand of the Senate and of the President held as if in concealment over this fatal cancer that is eating the very vitals of the nation? Why did they not say Slavery, and call upon the nation to repent of and forsake this sin?

Has this leprosy not infected every stone of the edifice that there is no salvation for us but in its entire destruction? Let us hope and pray that this may not be so, that this fast may be kept in sincerity and truth, and be followed by such convincing and enlightening power of the Spirit that the nation will be led to "Loose the bonds of wickedness," "Undo the heavy burdens," "Let the oppressed go free," "Break every yoke."

Sermon of Rev. Dr. Littlejohn.

RECTOR OF HOLY TRINITY, BROOKLYN.

For the Lord will not cast off forever; but though He cause grief, yet will He have compassion, according to the multitude of His mercies. For He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men."—Lamentations, iii., 31.

After a brief introduction, alluding to the occasion, the authority for it, and the proper mode of observing it, the doctor proceeded as follows:

Our thoughts to-day are not those of the ruler, the statesman, the philosopher, or the military leader, but those of the Christian citizen. We are here to bewail our offences, to acknowledge the full measure of our accountability, to look into the nation's heart and conscience, and mourn over the manifest proofs there to be seen of our common guilt as a nation.

The State, pressed by the emergency, calls upon the deepest and strongest element in its life to come to the rescue—upon Christianity to lead the people along the path of repentance and humiliation—upon the Church to organize anew its sympathies and powers for the religious awakening and discipline of the people. The State uses Christian agency for temporal ends. It calls upon it to rekindle the waning patriotism of some, to brace the shaken convictions and sluggish conscience of others. It calls upon it to remove, as far as possible, all doubt from the common mind as to the absolute justice of this contest. This work the Church is willing to do; these offices she now performs throughout her borders this day. But here she cannot stop. She cannot forget that her chief duty goes deeper, and extends immeasurably further. It is for her to deal with eternal issues—to point mankind to the life which shall outlive empires and races—to deal with the sins of the people, and the conditions and modes of forgiveness.

It is, indeed, a sublime spectacle to see a great people restored, by the sense of peril and calamity, into a nation of supplicants. We shall go through with the forms and usages of the day, but shall we have the reality? Messages, circulars, proclamations cannot extemporize the spirit which this occasion demands. That spirit must, if it exists at all, be a growth, somewhat thrown out from the mould and pressure of the common life. It is idle to think of coming together, and by a few acts of united worship, creating the virtues and graces demanded by the crisis. These services can only embody and utter the confessions and humiliations of hearts already purged and chastened. There are abundant reasons why the day should be kept with a very fullness of feeling:

1. The proved uncertainty of the wisest plans during the past two years, the baffled calculations, defeated strategies, failures and miscarriages in council and in the field, the great armies wasted away, the once confident, but now exploded anthems and conceits of what we were and could do.

2. Our losses of life and treasure, the myriad homes robed in the weeds of sorrow.

3. The land a prey to sedition and rebellion, though fortunately no longer the victim of party.

4. The growing contempt with which the Old World civilization regards us—our loss of position and prestige at the bar of the world's opinion.

These are reasons which should make this fast, in all its humbling lessons, a vital reality.

But if we count on its being so, we reckon on too much. The temper and attitude of the masses are far away from what the occasion demands. We have been severely handled in some regards, but what vice, what sin, what ignoble trait has been cast out of our life. God has not finished his task with us in the school of adversity. It is to be feared that an abyss of humiliation lies ahead of us whose horrors we have not dreamed of.

This war, view it as we may—as for the restoration of this or that interest—the putting down and casting out of this or that stubborn and refractory element in the national organism—is yet in its ultimate causes and results a chastisement and retribution of God. And the burden will not be lifted from our incurated shoulders until we shall give proof of repentance and amendment of life.

The preacher then closed with an exhortation to the people to carry forth with them to their homes and occupations the lessons of the day, as would the nation receive, from these Christian assemblies throughout the land a war account of courage and power.

The attendance at Holy Trinity was very large and every way impressive—the services being listened to with devout attention.

Sermon of Rev. Dr. E. H. Gillespie.

After alluding to the nations upon God as the only source of success to the children of Israel in the wars in which they were commanded to engage, and a few words of reference to the Proclamation of the Chief Magistrate, the speaker remarked that nations exist by the direct establishment or permission of God. The powers that be are ordained of God. It was the declaration of old that those nations which violated the laws of God should cease to exist, but when a nation having sinned humbled itself in repentance, the hand of vengeance was spared. The great sin of this nation was the general neglect of God's service which had characterized the masses, and as general that we might say without extravagance of language that we have the heathen in our midst. The speaker then asked "Who are they that control a nation?" Its great men. They influence not only its measured of State, but in a very large degree its morals. "When we behold the godlike intellect at one hour charming the nation's ear with tones of eloquence, and at another raving in the delirium of the wine cup, what can the influence be upon the morals of the young aspirants whose highest hopes are to follow in its footsteps.

"Still high-minded men should rule in our halls of legislation, we need never expect prosperity as a nation." The speaker here referred to the current delusion of those who had passed away, in accordance with the great law by which nations are judged, and to the double curse of war in the most revolting form in our land, when to say we strike down a brother and make his wife a widow and his children fatherless, while but yesterday for that brother we would have spilled our blood if his manifest right had been infringed upon. For, (said Hamlet,)

"Rightly to be great
Is not to stir without great argument,
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,
When honor is at stake."

If it be sharper than a serpent's tooth to have a thankless child, God, in His mysterious providence, has compelled our country to pluck unnumbered fangs from her bleeding bosom, where, nestling in corruption, vast broods of serpents have been hatched. Slimy monsters have even crawled around the altar of our God, and with their fascination guided consecrated hands from the sacred chalice to the sword. Only by a divine blessing upon violent remedies can the poisonous venom which is circulating through her veins be neutralized. It was a saying of Hazelwore that: "In peace children bury their parents, in war parents bury their children." What multitudes to-day are unconsciously looking for an absent form, or remembering the tones of the voice which but yesterday they heard in the utterance of affection, but is silent forever. It was a saying of a great General that a great defeat was the most dreadful scene on earth, and the next most dreadful was a great victory.

The speaker concluded with a reference to the hand of God as operating directly in our national punishment. He had ordained our powers, and also our scourge, and urged the considerations of duty and interest which prompted us as a nation to exercise a sincere and hearty repentance.

The Fast Day and the Jews.

In common with the rest of their fellow-citizens, the Israelites assembled in their respective places of worship and carried out the precepts of the President's Proclamation. Most of the Synagogues were opened and the Psalms appointed to be read on penitential days, read on the occasion.

LECTURE BY RABBI RAPHALL.

A very eloquent address was delivered by Rev. Dr. RAPHALL, at the Greene-street Synagogue. He remarked that it was a curious coincidence that on this a fast day appointed by their own religious observances, they met in compliance with the Proclamation of the President of the United States, to fast and pray. He had been in this country fourteen years. During the first ten years no public proclamation had ever disturbed their thoughts and feelings to humiliation and fasting. Once in every year the highest functionary in every State proclaimed a day of general thanksgiving, and with that the debt of national gratitude was supposed to be paid. But now the rulers of the nation come year after year and call upon the people to weary Heaven with fruitless professions of a penitence they did not feel, and of a humility they did not practice. These proclamations last days, on which no one feels have but the repetition of those so strongly reproved by the prophet Isaiah; and, though the people dare not put his questions, "Wherefore do we fast and Thou seest it not? afflict our souls and Thou wilt not notice it?"—since in reality the people do neither—still the answer would stand good: "Because while you profess humiliation, you persist in your arrogance and your extortions do not cease." If ever a people needed to humble itself before God—if ever fasting and prayer, sackcloth and ashes were to be worn—it was by the people of these United States. Like our fathers, the Israelites of old, for whom plans Nehemiah made such fervent supplication, the people of this country are justly amenable to his confession made for Israel: "In thets comisions, in all the great prosperity Thou didst bestow upon them, and throughout the large and rich land which Thou gavest unto them, they did not serve Thee, neither turned they from their evil deeds." The preacher then drew a parallel between the sins of the Israelites, which called forth the reproof of the preacher, and the past conduct of this nation, which was equally amenable to the words of the inspired prophet.

What were they to say for the citizens of the United States who already and so long possess the two greatest earthly blessings, Education and Freedom, and yet make so bad a use of both. Education should be the guardian of freedom and of virtue, it was the birthright of every American, bestowed on all and withheld from none. But what principles did it actually inculcate—what virtues did it really teach? Did it inculcate respect for free institutions? Answer, ye place-hunters, ye ballot-box stuffers, ye shoulder-hitters, who reduce self-government to a disgusting farce. Did it teach patriotism? Answer, ye parlor-men, ye office-seekers and holders, who cement party lines with the cohesive force of public plunder. Did it teach common honesty? Answer, ye speculators and speculators, who fatten on the blood of the hard-worked masses, and who dignify roguery by the name of smartness. His heart ached as he spoke to them of the effects of perverted education; it would ache still more were he to direct attention to the bitter fruits of abused freedom. He need not remind them that while the best men North and South had long been driven aloof from the affairs of the country, demagogues, fanatics and a party Press had so managed matters that they found themselves in the third year of a destructive but needless sectional war, which has armed brother against brother, consigned hundreds of thousands to an untimely grave, and to ruin and devastation tens of thousands of square miles of flourishing and happy land; and what was worse than all this, while humanity weeps we must suppress our sympathy. However, our hearts may yearn for peace and brotherly love, our reason convinces us that the present is not the time to expect, or even to hope for the cessation of blood. On the contrary, though we may detest the cause and course of events, it is our duty loyally to stand by our country, and, if necessary, to maintain her quarrel and defend her rights, while we have the consolation to know that our side did not begin the fray, and that the cause of Union was the worthiest in the field.

Services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

The services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle partook more of the character of a prayer meeting than of the usual Sunday exercises. There was quite a large attendance, and the Pastor, Rev. W. A. BARTLETT, spoke briefly in relation to the objects of the fast, and of our duties, as Christians, to our Government and country. The meeting was a very interesting one, many taking part in the exercises.

The Catholic Churches.

There was no special observance of the National Fast in our Catholic churches yesterday. This was owing to the well-known fact that the Church of Rome never countenances any feast or fast of a secular character, the doctrines of the church being in strict accord with canonical rules.

Fast Day in Brooklyn.

The National Fast Day was observed yesterday in Brooklyn by the business community generally. All the city offices and nearly all the stores were closed after 10 o'clock, A. M. Services were held in the churches, although sermons were preached in but few, the exercises consisting of reading the Proclamation, singing and praying. A large number of the community about changing residence, took occasion to go into their new quarters for the next year. The streets were filled with vehicles loaded with furniture, and the sidewalks with persons carrying light articles.

Fast Day in Williamsburgh.

MAY

[illegible] of the Valley school (frequently attended, now that navigation was a fixed fact, the gentlemen could be most constantly growing to the streets of New-York) and, as Gen. was the fitch of the stage to those men, that I have no doubt but Dyllow, of the Sentinel House, had made up his mention showing how the great of Broadway would add to the [illegible] of the bay city—in fact, the theory can fix very considerable, started a dotted horse laugh throughout the entire North. In commencing as the above I would say that on the 16th of April, 1863, at precisely 2½ o'clock, I saw a lie goat quietly browsing in Carondelet street, the seat of empire, and the tribal of the cotton king in New-Orleans. It was no figurative goat—the genus of an oriental flourish, but a good, strongly-tainted and most offensively-smelling goat, and as I subsequently learned from the pawnbroker, was owned "by one Barney O'Flizzy, back of the new Basin, toward the Magazine Cutaut." This new historical goat was generally white, except some black spots along its back, its tail had the usual most painful twist over toward the back of its head, and it was otherwise answerable to the general appearance of ordinary goats. I found, on examination, that the grass was of two kinds, crab and blue, both much esteemed in Kentucky for pastures, but never before known to grow in luxuriance in the most public thoroughfare—the unswerable Wall-street of this metropolitan city.

The arrival here, a few days ago, of the rebel crew of the Diana, was quite a God-send for the modest young ladies of this city, and they determined to make a most thrilling demonstration. To carry out this laudable idea, they proceeded at once, in goodly numbers, to Poindexter's Depot, the most notorious slave-pen in the city, where these patriots, much to the disgust of those young ladies, were confined, and then commenced smiling and ogling, and throwing kisses from the ends of their fingers, with the charming ways known to the sex. Many, indeed, were loaded down with fragant flowers which they threw into the slave-pen, after the fashion of rewarding a popular tenor. The sentinels in charge, who were very stolid New-England soldiers, expressed their opinion in actions, which were louder than words, that the said young ladies were making themselves very ridiculous. The prisoners, who had, with few exceptions, been rescued from the waters of Grand Lake, and, as a general thing, had no very great abundance of clothing, were certainly not of the superficial appearance to charm sentimental young ladies, but they seemed to be wonderfully petted for all that. When I left, I saw a tall, "piney-wood, rails-hael," denominated by Southern statesmen, "a mudsill," who was minus hat, shoes, vest and coat, whose skinny, starved face reminded one of the freckles on a turkey's egg, and whose tail, lank limbs and large hands and feet were no models for an Apollo—I saw this promising specimen of a rebel hero standing at the entrance to the slave-pen, gazing upon a bouquet of rare exotics, of the diameter of the top of a flour-barrel, evidently wondering what the young lady gave it to him for, and at last offering to exchange it off for a plug of tobacco, or a drink of New-Orleans whisky.

COMMERCIAL.

In commerce scarcely anything is doing, and no inducements whatever or encouragement is given. The Opelousas Railroad, under the control of the Government, is charging $10 ⅌ hhd., or lc. ⅌ lb. freight to New-Orleans from the interior, 120 miles; while sugar can be shipped to New-York from here to sailing vessels at $1 25 ⅌ hhd. With this immense charge and formalities to be complied with, a perfect apathy is manifested by all parties. Everything looks dark ahead for the loyal planter, the merchant and the shipowner—with the latter, so many risks to encounter from high insurance, rovers, &c., and a tariff of $1 ⅌ ton on ships to support military hospitals. The market is well stocked with everything from the North and West via the North—the Mississippi being still closed, but no trade with the interior of the State can be depended upon, with the enormous taxes on all kinds of commerce, $2 ⅌ bale on cotton; no bright prospect at present ahead; the small dreggers or coasters, from 50 to 100 miles above, get $4 ⅌ hhd. freight. Some sugars are stored here on Northern account, awaiting transportation. A private meeting of the planters was held at the St. Charles Hotel on Saturday night, but the proceedings have not transpired.

LACK OF FOOD AT THE SOUTH.

A Glimpse at Affairs in Rebeldom—The Scarcity of Food and other Necessaries of Life.

Correspondence of the London Times.

ATLANTA, Georgia, Saturday, Feb. 28, 1863.

It has been stated that, in spite of the legislation of each individual State, Southern planters would give evidence of their belief in the proximity of peace by sowing a breadth of cotton sufficient to yield two-thirds or three-fourths of an average crop. It is obvious that such is also the supposition of the majority of Southern journals, which teem with earnest appeals to the planters not to be deluded by anticipations of an early peace, which would lead them to expose the country to the appalling alternative of starvation or surrender. There is little doubt that if the Yankees knew it, the next four weeks, during which it is doubtful whether military operations on a large scale can be carried on, might be fraught with danger to the very existence of the infant Confederacy. Everywhere in this section the conviction is paramount that, if an armistice were once concluded, active hostilities would never again be resumed. An offer at this moment by the Federals of an armistice for three months upon favorable terms would be apt to be accepted, and neither argument nor entreaty would avail to prevent large crops of cotton being planted. The suspension of the blockade for three months would not be as fatal to the North as might at first sight be imagined. All the Northern war ships upon the sea cannot guard the entire Southern ports of an average of at least two vessels a week, and I have been astonished to notice how the stock of all kinds of imported goods has grown since my first acquaintance with the Confederate States, five months ago. Many luxuries, such as wines, brandies, silks, muslins and books, would be gratefully welcomed if the blockade were temporarily lifted; but they are not vital to the salvation of the young nation. What is vital is that plenty of food should be grown within the bounds of the Confederacy, and anything which militates against the devotion of the next few weeks to the preparation of the ground for cereals would be of more advantage the North than half a million of men. Happily there seems to be a growing sense everywhere of the danger arising from a scarcity of the great staples of food; but there is, nevertheless, a tendency in the Cotton States to plant a greater breadth of their great staple, as also in Virginia to plant more tobacco, than is consistent with the safety of the entire community. Each succeeding opportunity for arresting the growth of cereals by the offer of a temporary armistice has not been perceived by the Federals; it will be too late to make any such overture when these words are read in the Northern States.

But, in the interim between the present time and the wheat harvest in July, it is shrewdly suspected in Northern, and generally admitted in Southern journals, that there will be a pressure upon the Confederacy to find a sufficiency of food. A bread for each of the large armies which have sprung from the soil. It is known universally, and I may therefore be permitted to mention, that the wheat crop of 1862 was an unusually poor one in the Confederate States, and, although a sufficiency of grain for the year's supply of food was grown, the limited means of transportation possessed by the Confederacy are taxed to the utmost to convey this grain from remote corners of States to the spots where it is needed for consumption. In no other item has the pressure of the blockade's grip been so heavily felt as in its prohibition of the import of English iron. With the ample command of labor which the slave population furnishes to this Government, many fresh railroads would have been made and rails been forthcoming for their tracks. In one or two very important cases an hiatus in an extensive internal system of communication has been supplied by the Government. For instance, one of the great internal highways from east to west has been completed by the link of railroad from Selma, on the Alabama River, to Meridian, in Mississippi, which supersedes the necessity for the long detour by Mobile, and renders nugatory any attempt to cut of communication between east and west by destroying the railroad which connects Montgomery with Mobile. It is astonishing that no such attempt should have been made from Pensacola, which has long been in Federal hands, and is distant not more than forty miles from Pollard, on the Alabama and Florida Railroad. The opportunity thus afforded of isolating the East from the West, and of impeding the circulation of an important orta of the Confederate heart by an assault in rear of Pollard, has never been acted during nearly two years of warfare. The opening of the railroad from Selma to Meridian has frustrated a policy which might have seriously damaged the Confederacy, and which obviously ought to have suggested itself to the Washington Junto. The meaning tape by which to compute and account for Confederate success has long struck me as being not so much the sagacity and energy of the Cabinet at Richmond as the stagnant blindness, incredible want of enterprise, and general incapacity of the Cabinet at Washington.

Another instance in which the Confederate Government is completing an important link of railroad is to be found in the line which they are building between Danville, in Virginia, and Greensborough, in North Carolina, (a distance of less than 50 miles,) and which will be completed this Summer. By this operation they absolve themselves from a dependence upon the line of railroad which runs from Richmond through Petersburgh and Weldon, and which has for years been the great highway of connection between North and South. By opening another approach to Richmond, they render it possible for Southern Virginia, the Commonwealth is giving but another instance of what might be done in every turn where patriotism and energy are invoked in behalf of a people struggling for independence. There is, however, a great deal of unfounded nonsense about, will not be much suffering to be encountered from shortage of cereals between the time and the 1st of August. No back spring harvest because the impression so that the South will be starved into the terms of Robert Rowan and Warren, who, rightly or wrongly, are here regarded as the twin instigators of a war, which, although loving each other little, they combine to hate heartily. But it will paralyze military operations to learn that the sense of eight millions of their brethren whose they are striving to will back by which have pillaged as the plunder of ancestral plate, china, pictures and servants, the desecration of family Scriptures, and the plundered cottage of Virginia, will during these next few weeks suffer severely. Hunger and want, and even in some cases famine, however, could well to break the spirit of this people, there would not now be hundreds of thousands of ardent Confederate soldiers on the field. Nor can were such pressure, it is believed, be hereafter experienced as will do more than make the next few months exceptionally conspicuous as periods of more than usual suffering. Debit Deus his quoque finem. There may to still in store for these sorely tried States further drafts of the cup of misery, which must be drained before the good Is Wot. That it will eventually be was neither man, woman nor child among the thousands I have conversed with entertains a shadow of doubt.

It is unquestionably competent to the Federals to increase the pressure of want by their possession of some of the finest grain-growing districts of the Confederacy. All the northern moiety of Virginia, the fruitful valley of the Shenandoah, the eastern section of North Carolina, produce in ordinary times most of the grain which supplies bread to the South, or is exported through New-York to Brazil and South America. Upon each of these districts the iron heel of the invader is planted. Further, more, in that portion of Tennessee which is in the Federal grasp Gen. Rosecrans has forbidden every kind of agriculture, and aged men and women are abidden (the only inhabitants in that region) who reject the oath of allegiance are driven down South at the point of the bayonet, to increase the number of mouths which the Confederacy has to feed. Another great source of supply is cut off by the suppression of the North Carolina fisheries, which ordinarily yield millions of herrings and shad, salted on the spot by large gangs of male and female negroes. In this respect the North Carolina herring far surpasses the Nova Scotian, which is caught out at sea, thrown into the hold of a ship, and salted for many days after it is secured. The salt herring of North Carolina is here asserted to be the finest in the world. A gentleman who owns one of these fisheries told me that he had caught at one draught enough herrings to fill 100 barrels. The offal of the fish is valuable as manure, and the yield of Indian corn from fields sprinkled with the heads and entrails of the shad is said to be something fabulous. It has been customary to feed the negroes upon salt fish, which, as well as salt pork, they relishing preferred to fresh meat. But the great staple of Southern food has been cut off by the Federal possession of Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds. Nevertheless, such is the wealth of the interior waters and bayous and lagoons which still remain to the Confederacy that it is doubtful whether, if only transport could be commanded, the whole population might not be supported on fish alone. For instance, the bay of Mobile seems literally paved with oysters, not less delicious than the bivalves of the Jamies River, with which Richmond is beautifully supplied. The "shell roads" at Mobile and New-Orleans, constructed of oyster shells, testify to the abundance of the yield in the neighborhood of those cities. Again, the extraordinary influence of game and deer and wild ducks through the Southern States assists their commissariat, and supports hundreds of families in remote country districts. For some time the scarcity of shot militated against the destruction of small game, but recently a wooden shot tower has been successfully established at Petersburgh, in Virginia, and shot is becoming cheap and abundant. It is extravagant to imagine that these immense districts, teeming with the richest gifts of nature, and blessed with a climate incompatible with the consumption of an Englishman's allowance of animal food, are inadequate to the support of a sparse population, even though agriculture be partially suspended. The sole difficulty is to bring the food and the mouths together. This is the enigma with the solution of which, until the wheat harvest of July, rest on every place and the Confederate States will have to grapple. It would generally seem that if means for making a crop and fishing nets could be brought in through the blockade.

The rest of this curious letter is occupied with a discussion of the probabilities of the campaign in the Southwest. The opinion is expressed that Gen. Johnston's army in Tennessee cannot "be forcibly expelled from its strong line of defences, which reach from Tullahoma to Manchester." On the other hand, the excellent condition of Gen. Rosecrans' army is acknowledged. After alluding to affairs at Vicksburgh and Charleston, the writer again reverts to the food question and makes this suggestion:

"It may safely be predicted, be the scarcity of food what it may, that some other way of making good the deficiency will be found than bartering for Yankee provisions the equivalent for European gold. There is at this moment in the Port of Wilmington a small Scotch steamer, whose name it is not necessary to mention, swift as an antelope, drawing four and a half feet of water, and able to run into any inlet along 2,000 miles of coast. What is to hinder the importation, in similar steamers, of cargoes of provisions, should necessity demand? Nor are there wanting other methods of supply which will suggest themselves to any intelligent man who is not blinded by the amaurosis which seems epidemic in Washington."

COMMENTS OF THE TIMES.

In its editorial columns the Times reproduces the statements of its correspondent, and draws this moral from his story:

"We may entertain what opinion we please as to the fortune of the war, or the amount of suffering which the Southern States will have to go through, but one thing is certain, and that is, that their aristocracy of planters is passing through a great moral ordeal.

The planters have been called an aristocracy. No doubt they are in some very important senses. They are a class of masters. They have a more fixed position and more hereditary rank and consequence than any other class in the United States, however wealthy and educated. They are accustomed to the use of authority, to concerted action, to mutual deference, to political and to military life. From them are taken the best soldiers and the best civil functionaries of the United States. In the Northern States the wealthiest and most educated class confess themselves driven from public life and claim the privilege of privacy. In the South there is no such necessity, or excuse, or desire, for the highest class there; it is all respects the highest. Their civilized habits are in accordance with their social position, and English visitors recognize in them the nearest approach to the English country gentleman. But if even English country gentlemen have their errors and shortcomings and their faulty side as a class, so have the planters of the Slave States. The American scandals that most offend our moral sense are in this quarter.

What we now witness is but the repetition of a very old and very important process. It is the sowing; the purifying, and the consolidating of a governing and conquering class. The war which inflicts such terrible hardships on the Southerners draws them thereby into a higher life, and a rank more in accordance with their pretensions than they have ever possessed as mere planters and slaveowners. The growth of such a class is a matter of historical fact, not speculative morality. It is idle to say that there ought not to be such people, or that they have no right to dominate over other people and become the masters of the world. It is enough that these are men and women, and that under certain circumstances they will certainly arise and acquire power. Nobody would venture to defend all the national principles or the particular steps by which the great races and empires of the world have won their dominion. Be their policy ever so questionable, their qualities and their conquests cannot be denied.

There is no such class in the Northern States, and we do not think there is such a development. It is making soldiers, not a ruling and dominating class. There are there soldiers of fortune; there are crowds of mercenaries; there are democrats who must fight; there are political fanatics who are furious and frightened; there are contractors and speculators fattening out of the rinpous expenditures of the war; but there is no class of men like the Southern aristocracy, taking their natural place at the head of affairs and in the conduct of the war. The Federal forces are a standing army in the very worst and lowest sense of that word. The Confederate army more resembles the forces by which the wars of the Roses and the civil war of the seventeenth century were fought in this country, when the great landowners assembled their retainers in the form of militia and gentry. The Confederate army, indeed, may be compared to our volunteer corps, but it is probably even more "social" and "aristocratic" in its constitution. As long as the American war lasts, it must widen this difference between the two sides, and throw still more on the Southern side all the elements of power, coherence, and command. In the Old World we have seen over and overagain the lamentable fate of armies without officers, and officers with indifferent troops. The lambs led by lions beat the lions led by lambs. There may be many brave gentlemen and good officers in the North, but there is not the class; and even if they were now to arise they would be crushed and paralyzed by the state of society. The men whom this war will raise and enrich in the North are not fighting men or rulers. They will be an aristocracy of money, of good houses and furniture, of equipages, of luxury; but, like the existing aristocracy of New-England, they will be only private men. How long they will stand at all in the face of the stronger and more active elements now at work in America remains to be seen."

Obituary.

DEATH OF SIR GEORGE CORNEWALL LEWIS.

Sir GEORGE CORNEWALL LEWIS, Secretary of State for War, died suddenly at his seat, Harpton, in Radnorshire, where he was spending his Easter recess, on Monday, April 13. Although his health had been infirm during the Winter, the attack which terminated fatally developed itself but three days before, and was brought on by a cold which he had taken.

Sir Cornewall Lewis was the eldest son of the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Frankland Lewis. He was born in 1806, and having received his early education at Eton, graduated at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1828, taking the highest honors in classics and a second class in mathematics. He was called to the bar in the Middle Temple in 1831, but never practiced. In 1836, he was appointed one of the Commissioners of Inquiry for the Relief of the Poor and into the state of the Church in Ireland, and the following year was placed on the Commission of Inquiry into the Affairs of Malta. He was a Poor Law Commissioner from January, 1839, to July, 1847, when he was first elected member for the County of Hereford in the House of Commons. The late veteran sat for that county till 1852, and has, since the death of his father in 1855, represented the Radnor district of boroughs. He was Secretary to the Board of Control from November, 1847, to May, 1850; Chief Secretary for the Home Department from May, 1846, to July, 1850; Financial Secretary to the Treasury from July, 1850, to February, 1852; and Chancellor of the Exchequer from March, 1855, to February, 1858, and was appointed Secretary of State for the Home Department in June, 1859. On the resignation of the late Lord Hardinge, of Lord (SIDNEY HERBERT) Sir GEORGE was selected by Lord PALMERSTON to fill the office of Secretary of State for War. He was distinguished for his accurate and extensive political acquirements, and was widely known as an author. Associable historical and philosophical works may be mentioned his inquiry into the Credibility of Early Roman History; Essays on the Origin and Formation of the Romance Languages; and On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion. For about a year he was editor of the Edinburgh Review, relinquishing that post to become Chancellor of the Exchequer in Lord PALMERSTON'S first administration. Of his political works the best known were "An Essay on the Use and Abuse of Political Terms;" On Local Disturbances in Ireland, and the Irish Church Question;" "An Essay on the Government of Dependencies;" and a comprehensive treatise on the "Methods of Observation and Reasoning in Politics." The last work, "Dialogues on the Best Form of Government," was published only a few weeks ago.

Sir CORNEWALL LEWIS will be sadly missed in the future discussions of American questions in England, and in the official action which may be taken upon them. Although he had by no means espoused the cause of our Government, his leanings were decidedly in its favor, as was made apparent by the position which he took in opposition to Mr. GLADSTONE, when he so hastily declared in his speech at Dunferland that the South had demonstrated its right to be considered a "nation."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The Army of the Potomac is undoubtedly in motion. On Monday morning at daylight the movement began, the Seventh and Eleventh Corps and the Cavalry Corps taking the lead. How far the grand movement has progressed we can only infer from the time which has elapsed. The direction which it has taken will soon be indicated in the reports which will reach us. A gentleman who arrived in Philadelphia yesterday from the army, reports that the pontoons were laid on Thursday night and Wednesday morning across the Rappahannock at Port Royal, and that the troops immediately began to cross, and by 10 o'clock four corps had got over in safety. Subsequently cannonading and severe firing were heard across the river.

There appears to be no doubt that the whole rebel line in front of Gen. ROSECRANS in Tennessee has been advanced. A battle appears to be imminent.

We have a dispatch from Milliken's Bend, on the Mississippi, above Vicksburgh, stating that orders were issued on the 23d for Gen. GRANT's whole army to march, with six days' rations.

Gen. ELLET, with his Marine Brigade, in his operations up the Tennessee, has destroyed every grist and saw mill, and every distillery on the river. The towns of Hamburgh and Eastport were also destroyed.

Our Washington correspondent says an order will be issued to-day from the War Department directing that the two-years' men, now being discharged and returning home, shall retain their arms until they reach home, when they will be immediately mustered out of the service and paid all arrears of bounty money.

News reached Wheeling on Monday that a considerable fight took place about two miles from Strasburgh on Wednesday last. Maj. MCGEE, of the Third Virginia cavalry, with portions of BOWARD'S, UTT'S and WHITE'S cavalry companies, encountered a force of three or four hundred rebels at the place indicated. Maj. MCGEE's squadron was the advance of a more formidable force out upon a reconnoissance, and he therefore made a dash upon the rebels and after a very brief and brilliant fight drove them from their position without the assistance of the main force. One man of ROWAND'S company was killed and another was wounded. The rebel loss was five killed and nine wounded, beside 25 prisoners and 40 horses.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal having stated that some gentleman who submitted an important invention to the Navy Department, had been rather cavalierly treated, Mr. FOX, the Assistant Secretary, sends a communication to that paper which concludes thus: "As this case, however, is only one of very many side things thrown at the Navy Department through the medium of the Press, calculated in a general way to mislead the public, and to inculcate the belief that proper attention is not paid to the inventive and mechanical skill of the country, you are hereby informed that any person who wishes in an earnest and practical shape to present any project to aid the Navy in its efforts to put down the rebellion, will meet with the fullest and promptest attention—a course invariably hitherto pursued—and should the project seem at all likely to succeed, every means will be called into play to carry it out to successful completion."

In regard to the alleged shooting of BRAGG by BRECKINRIDGE, prisoners say that BRAGG had condemned some Kentuckians to death. BRECKINRIDGE remonstrated angrily, saying that "shooting Kentuckians was played out," and if the order was executed, he would shoot BRAGG. The latter executed the Kentuckians, and BRECKINRIDGE killed him.

FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival at Halifax of the steamship Europa, we receive advices from Europe three days later. She left Liverpool on the 18th, and Queenstown on the 19th inst. The English shippers and merchants interested in the trade with Matamoras have worked themselves into a high pitch of excitement regarding the interference with their business by the United States cruisers. A deputation of them waited upon Earl RUSSELL on the 16th, in relation to the matter. During the interview the statement was made that Minister ADAMS had recently given a special license for a ship to proceed from England to Matamoras, free from any interference by American cruisers, to carry supplies of arms and ammunition for the Mexicans in their war with France. This appears to have been the case, as attempts were made to negotiate a policy of insurance at Lloyds, on a vessel furnished with certificates from Mr. ADAMS, addressed to Admiral DUPONT. The publication of these facts furnished the occasion for a furious attack upon Mr. ADAMS by the London Times and other English papers. The Times characterizes the proceeding as an arrogant assumption, and says, in reference to it, "The exercise of the slightest authority by foreign Ministers in England is not to be permitted for one moment." Notice was given in the House of Commons on the 16th of inst. to call up the matter of the [illegible] supposed rebel gunboat Alexandra [illegible] in regard to the "greenback" [illegible] had revealed the fact that large amounts had been issued in five, ten and twenty-dollar notes. The London Daily News believes that the difficulties between England and the United States in [illegible] the Paris Moniteur has a paragraph [illegible] it is stated that the "the last dispatches from the Washington Government have a character of increasing irritation." The British Chancellor of the Exchequer has made his annual statement, showing a surplus of three and three-quarters million pounds, which he proposed to reduce by reducing the duty on tea and the tax on incomes. The Polish question, according to a Vienna dispatch threatens to assume greater complications. The movements of the insurgents are becoming every day more active. Numerous engagements are reported, and an attack on Karlisch was daily expected. The Liverpool Cotton market was [illegible] and prices had further advanced. Breadstuffs and provisions were dull. Consols were [illegible] for money.

GENERAL NEWS.

[illegible] an official list of the [illegible] the ill-fated steamship [illegible] have been saved, [illegible] officers reported [illegible] the vessel was wrecked [illegible] and her mails and cargo lost.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes: "A distinguished Republican official said a day or two since that it had been determined finally that Gen. MCCLELLAN is not to be again called into military service. It is understood that his report is just now ready for transmission to the War Department, accompanied by a request that it shall have an early publication."

The St. Louis News makes some remarkable statements regarding the "deportation without compensation" movement of negroes to Western Missouri, which, it says, is going on at such a formidable rate as to threaten the absolute extirpation of Slavery in that quarter in a short time. Under the encouragement and the armed aid which the movement receives from Kansas, the slaves, not only of the border counties, but of counties low down on the river, are swarming across the line in droves, taking whatever movable property, such as horses, wagons, cattle, furniture, belonging to their masters, they can seize, and making their way without molestation. On Friday night of last week fifty ran away in a gang, from Lafayette County, carrying off six wagons, eighteen horses and one carriage. Nine of these belonged to Mr. PACKARD, of the City Hotel; nine to H. WALLACE; three to Gen. VAUGHAN; two to J. R. GRAVES; two to JOSEPH MORRELAND. The Lexington Union states that, during the last three weeks, not less than 300 slaves have escaped from Lafayette County. These slaves all go to Kansas. The very "Red Legs" and other organizations in that State engaged in enticing them from Missouri, are said to be sending them down into the Indian Country and selling them to the Cherokees and Choctaws. Choctaws give $300 to $400 each for the negro men, and proportionate prices for women and children. The persons engaged in this business are making large sums out of it.

PAUL MORPHY has again been beaten by Mons. DE RIVIERE in a friendly match at chess—the latter winning three out of five games.

A Suicidal Policy—The Rebellion and Slavery.

The Richmond Whig felicitates the Confederacy that Gen. MCCLELLAN was chosen chief of the Federal army, and was continued so long in that position. It declares that "with the immense numbers at his command, an officer of truth, courage, enterprise and daring would have pushed us severely."

Now, so far as regards the unfitness of Gen. MCCLELLAN for aggressive warfare, we have nothing further to say. That question is forever settled. It has been made as clear as mid-day that he lacks the prime essentials of enterprise, daring, rapidity, and the rare faculty of coming to prompt and sure conclusions in sudden emergencies, which NAPIER calls "the certain mark of a master-spirit in war." A few party hacks, long bent upon turning him to some political account, still shut their eyes to all evidence, and complain of his removal. This folly is now simply laughed at. It has ceased to engage serious attention.

But the Richmond paper greatly mistakes in deeming this long period of delay, occasioned by the inefficiency of Gen. MCCLELLAN, a matter for congratulation to the slaveholders' rebellion. It of course judges with a primary reference to the interests of Slavery. But it can easily be shown that those interests required that the strife should be decided on the one side or the other in the quickest time possible. Whatever other damage the prolongation of the war necessarily works, Slavery especially suffers; and each new month has reduced its chances of recovering its old strength and security. MCCLELLAN was in command fifteen months. At the time he assumed the responsibility, the general sentiment of the Northern people was strongly in favor of subduing the rebellion without disturbing the relations of Slavery. It was believed that it might and would be done, and that speedily. In all earthly probability such would have been the result, had MCCLELLAN used to the best advantage the means at his disposal. Richmond would have been taken, Virginia and all the border States would have been speedily lost to the Confederacy, and the whole concern would have fallen through, long before the present time, leaving Slavery essentially unharmed. But the inaction of MCCLELLAN gave the rebels time to discipline and consolidate, saved Richmond, chilled and suppressed all loyal feeling at the South, filled the rebel heart with confidence, drew every Southern young man into the army, created the belief throughout Europe that the South was unconquerable, gave the Northern people an over-estimate of the real formidableness of the rebellion, reconciled them to delay, caused them to canvass more thoroughly than before the real character of the struggle, and by the unexpected sacrifices it imposed, engendered a deeper hatred of Slavery than in the ordinary course of events could have been reached in years. Never were the brains of the people more active than while MCCLELLAN was lying still; and so great was the change which was gradually and yet surely wrought, that by the next Summer Congress passed, without exciting the slightest feeling, such Anti-Slavery measures as emancipation in the District of Columbia, the recognition of Hayti and Liberia, the perpetual prohibition of Slavery in the Territories, the bill giving fugitive slaves the right of trial by jury and debarring all rebel slaveowners from all benefit of the Fugitive Slave law, and the confiscation of the slaves of all rebel officials—measures which nine months before would have started a perfect tempest of party opposition. The long halt in effective operations wrought a similar effect upon the religious mind of the country—as was strikingly manifested in the unprecedentedly strong Anti-Slavery utterances of its general conventions, without an exception. A change of even greater moment gradually came over the soldiers in the army, multitudes of whom were at first, in the strongest degree, opposed to any interference with Slavery. This change in the army was strictly in accordance with human nature. A protracted conflict, however conducted, would inevitably aggravate hostility; and all such aggravated hostility must necessarily react upon the institution which gave birth to the war.

Our own policy, from the beginning, has been to put this war through with the utmost practicable energy, without reference to its effects upon Slavery one way or the other. We believed in one paramount object—and that, the speedy and effective reestablishment of the National authority, however it might affect the peculiar institution. Our doctrine has been that the war should be conducted strictly on military principles, without regard to political considerations of any character whatever. That, we are confident, is the only true doctrine. But there have been large numbers who have practiced upon a different principle: Pro-Slavery men on the one hand, who have been for subordinating the whole management of the war to the preservation of Slavery, and radical Anti-Slavery men, on the other, who have been for subordinating the whole management of the war to the destruction of Slavery. It is astonishing how events have proved that both of these classes were all the while really working against their own ends, though they knew it not. The one class clung to MCCLELLAN with the blindest devotion through all his fifteen months of inefficiency, which were all the while telling with more injurious effect than anything else could have done against their favorite institution; and the other class labored for his removal, though, unconsciously to themselves and to himself, his dilatory management was promoting their ends infinitely better than any swift and decisive action could have done. No discerning man now fails to see that expedition was the true policy of the friends of Slavery, and delay of its enemies. And yet MCCLELLAN, the very embodiment of delay, has found his opponents among the latter, and his supporters among the former.

We are not surprised to see the Richmond sheet involving itself in the same inconsistency. It is one of the most notorious facts in American history that Slavery, from the outset, has been more injured by its mistaken friends than by its bitterest enemies. The rebellion itself was but the final upshot of a long series of just such suicidal movements. This Pro-Slavery felicitation over the inefficiency of Gen. MCCLELLAN, is in perfect keeping with all that preceded.

The Army of the Potomac.

Nothing has been published at Washington of the movements of Gen. HOOKER since Monday, when it was announced by the National Intelligencer that our army had commenced crossing the Rappahannock at daybreak. It was generally supposed that this was indicative of an immediate general action. In December last, Gen. BURNSIDE threw his pontoons over the Rappahannock on Thursday the 11th, and his army crossed that night and next day, and on Saturday they fought the battle of Fredericksburgh. Gen. HOOKER's plan of action is probably fundamentally different from that adopted by Gen. BURNSIDE, though what it may be he has not advertised the public; and most of his officers, and even the rebels, seem up to the latest hour to have been altogether ignorant of it. Some persons writing from the army as late as Tuesday, assert that he is going up the Rappahannock, others that he is going down; one rebel writer insinuates that he will make the Mattapony his base of operations, while JEFF. DAVIS' private organ, the Richmond Enquirer, has a long article making it clear that his movement is to be up the Pamunkey. We have no doubt that the latter article was based upon information obtained from JEFF. DAVIS himself, who had it published to confuse HOOKER by showing that the rebels knew all about his plans—which HOOKER in turn will probably prove was a mistake. We have read a letter from the army written in the early part of this week by one who would be likely to know, which said that "everybody was in the dark, and that three at least of the Major-Generals were then totally ignorant of the plan of action." Under these circumstances, the public will be compelled to simply wait for the development of events—which they will be very well satisfied to do; and will, in the meantime, indulge the thought that plans so well kept have at least one element of success not possessed by some previous ones.

If HOOKER push up the river and march for Gordonsville, we imagine he would have a battle at that place, or before he got there, as the rebels could move their troops with greater facility and speed than is in his power. If he move down and in the rear of Fredericksburgh, we imagine that the rebel army would fall back at least to Sexton's Junction, and make the North Anna their defensive line; for nowhere short of there could they rapidly concentrate all their troops and get a position equal in strength to that which they hold at present. Some fear that if HOOKER march his army in the rear of Fredericksburgh, the rebels may simply leave a force to obstruct his passage to Richmond and to defend that city, while they will push on with their main body to Washington. Perhaps they might, if Washington were left uncovered, and there were no obstruction. But Washington is not only one of the best defended cities in the world by the fortifications immediately around it, but other works have been constructed and other forces planted, at points of which it is not necessary to speak, and which, we believe, are sufficient to hold in check the whole of LEE's army.

We have a Philadelphia report at a late hour from the army, that the pontoons were laid across the river at Port Royal on Tuesday night and Wednesday morning; that four of our corps d'armée had crossed in safety, and that cannonading and severe firing had been heard on this side of the river. It is very likely that a part, at least, of this statement is correct, though the cannonading may, perhaps, only be preliminary, and not indicative that the general action had then commenced. Port Royal is about eighteen miles below Falmouth, on the other side of the Rappahannock, and is one of the points at which a demonstration was made by Gen. HOOKER a few days ago. Whether or no the great battle is commenced, it is certain that if HOOKER is across the river, it is impossible that it should be postponed.

A SPY CONDEMNED TO DEATH.—"THOMAS M. CAMPBELL, of the so-called Confederate army," was condemned by a Court-martial, sitting at Cincinnati, on Monday of this week, to be executed by hanging, and Gen. BURNSIDE has had him put in irons, at Sandusky, Ohio, and has issued an order to the commander of that post to see that the sentence of the Court is duly executed at 12 o'clock, noon, of this day, May 1st. The charge against the prisoner is that of being "found and arrested within our lines as a spy," and the specification sets forth that he "was found and arrested within the lines of the United States forces on the 11th of April, near Ruggles' Mills, Bourbon County, Ky., as a spy." The Court, after mature deliberation on the evidence adduced, found him guilty of both the specification and the charge, and the sentence of death was the result. We have not learned, up to the present hour, that the President has interfered with the sentence of the Court or the order of Gen. BURNSIDE.

The place that this spy was arrested was not far from the capital of the State of Kentucky, and the time, near the beginning of last month, was about the period when the rebels were making demonstrations with a strong force in that direction, which they were prevented, however, from carrying out by the very thorough whipping administered them by Gen. GILMORE, near Somerset. If it is ever proper in time of war to execute the highest penalty against a spy, we do not see but that it is eminently just to make an example in this case.

So far as we can recall at this moment, we believe no spies have been hung by our military authorities since the war began. Hundreds have been caught, and probably not a few have been shot in the common chances and by the ordinary methods of war; but there has been no formal enforcement of the penalty which all military law denounces against this offence. To this fact we may attribute the perfect impunity with which suspicious rebels haunt our camps, and the extraordinary knowledge that their leaders and officers have of our movements and plans. Our Southern extracts have from time to time shown that a very different policy is pursued by the rebel leaders. We should think that not less than a hundred men had been hung in the South within the last two years, on the pretext that they were spies.

The Siege of Puebla.

At length we have intelligence from Mexico which gives us some idea of what is taking place at Puebla, the seat of war in that country. By telegraph from San Francisco we have advices from Puebla to the 6th inst., and per steamer Sheldrake, from Havana, the dates are given up to the 9th inst. The general tenor of these advices is that a good deal of hard fighting had taken place, and the contest was still raging. The Mexican dispatch to San Francisco, via Acapulco, states that since the 31st ult., the French had kept up a constant bombardment of Puebla. Their fire had destroyed the convent of San Agustin and six blocks of buildings, with no special progress toward occupying the city; coupled with this is the French account, which states that Gen. FOREY is in possession of the environs of Puebla, and master of the communications and fortified works commanding the city.

The advices via Havana are three days later, and they come from French sources exclusively. These advices state that on the 23d ult., Puebla was completely surrounded, and a part of the French force already inside the walls. On the 23d and 24th ult., a trench was dug from the hill of San Juan toward the Penitentaria. This trench was not completed till the night of the 30th ult., when the Penitentaria was taken by storm. The next point of attack was the Fort of San Javier, which was taken after a desperate struggle. These important positions being occupied, it is stated that the attacking column advanced directly against the city—the streets of which were obstructed by barricades. The fighting in the streets is said to have been desperate, the Mexicans contesting the ground inch by inch. But the nearest houses and two of the streets were soon taken. From this forward, the French had to take house by house; the sappers breaking down the walls to open the way to the soldiers. On the 8d inst., the attacking parties were advancing, though slowly, to within 100 yards of the cathedral, which stands in the Plaza des Armas. Subsequently, it is stated that the Cathedral and Plaza des Armas were taken, thus dividing the city into two parts, and leaving to the Mexicans only the Forts of Guadalupe and Soreto, which forts, however, it is said, command that part of the city occupied by the French. Very little is said about the losses on either side. The French represent their loss in the various contests as quite small—only 600 to 700 men, among which is VERNET DE LAUMIERE. Among the Havana items of news we find the significant one, that the city "is being turned completely into a hospital for the sick and wounded French soldiers from Mexico."

Gen. COMONFORT, with his army of 15,000 men intact, was near Puebla on the opposite side of Rio Prieto. The expeditionary force of the French is stated at 34,000 men, though 18,000 only were detached for the capture of the Plaza des Armas. Gen. FOREY is said to be sanguine of capturing Puebla and the whole Mexican army, numbering 20,000 men.

Such is the substance of the advices from Mexico published yesterday. It will be perceived that the reports of the destruction of COMONFORT's army by Gen. BAZAINE, which have come regularly by the last three arrivals, are finally disposed of as being destitute of foundation. It will also be perceived that no mention is made of the action in which the French were repulsed from the fort San Javier with severe loss, on the 26th ult. The French accounts say nothing of what took place between the 23d and 30th ult. These and other circumstances throw doubt on the advices received via Havana. And then the news from Puebla is down to the 9th inst., brought to Havana by the French ship Jean Bart, which sailed from Vera Cruz on the 15th inst. This would give six days for the mail from Puebla to Vera Cruz, and as the distance between the two places is regularly accomplished by couriers in thirty hours, it is nonsense to suppose that the Jean Bart could bring no dates later than the 9th inst. Furthermore, another French ship, the Tilsit, sailed from Vera Cruz on the 16th inst., one day after the Jean Bart, and arrived at Havana on the 21st inst., but she is said to have brought nothing later or confirmatory. There is little doubt but that whatever transpires around Puebla is known in Vera Cruz every forty-eight hours, and it is a suspicious circumstance, so far as the French are concerned, that they give us no account of the state of affairs at Puebla between the 9th and 14th inst., at which latter date the information must have been in the possession of the French officials in Vera Cruz.

There are several points in the advices just received which are, however, plain enough and of a striking character. The Mexicans are making a most courageous, determined and patriotic resistance to the invader. The enemy is now attacking Puebla with a well appointed army, four times larger than that with which Gen. Scott fought his way from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, which he entered and held captive. According to their own accounts, the French have been furiously assailing the city of Puebla from the 23d ult. to the 9th inst., a period of 17 days, and though the public may judge differently, we believe they are no nearer victory than they were when they sailed from France.

In view of these facts, and the aspect of affairs in Europe, it requires no remarkable astuteness to foresee what must be the result of this French attempt to conquer Mexico, or obtain a foothold there for dominant French influence on this continent.

The Grit of the Race.

Every race possessing any sort of vitality has some share of fighting men and military capacity. Not a few have developed a proportion amounting at times to national prowess of the most splendid character. And yet but two or three races have ever arisen so purely heroic as to endure the uttermost extremity and adversity of war without yielding. "The hardest fend off," is a common expression of the commonest of natural laws, and hence the inevitable supremacy of such a race is as clearly written in the nature of things as in history. There need be no antecedent lust of conquest. Man is naturally a fighting animal; and, whatever the particular cause of the quarrel, it is grit that almost invariably carries the day in the long run.

How happened it that Rome subdued Carthage? The latter was the superior in material resources, and in generalship too; and in courage fully equal. Well, it did not happen at all; it all came in the natural course of things. The Roman had the most grit, and that tells the whole story. When HANNIBAL was apparently ready to crush Rome like an egg-shell, there was no flinching; Rome could be crushed, but it was not in her to submit. On the other hand Carthage was no sooner in that condition than she straightway began to treat; and the consequence was, that the plowshare soon ran over her foundations. The difference in the military fortunes of these two Powers was simply the difference in their characters.

The nature that fights for its purpose uncalculating to the death, has an advantage over a calculating and conservative antagonist that can only be stated as infinite. This was the distinctive Roman quality, the essence of Roman superiority. The point of extremity, where others began to think of peace, was the very point where Romans ceased to think of peace. In point of fact they endured enough suffering in war to have subdued most of their adversaries twice over. They conquered the world, not because they could inflict more blows, but because they could endure more "punishment" than the world together.

Unquestionably the next race to the Roman in this toughness of fibre is the Anglo-Saxon. But it is a question yet to be determined what effect American climate and life have had upon it. The Southern people, in the early part of the war, made much of their superior purity of Anglo-Saxon blood; and they argued from it, with a good deal of plausibility, that this would surely give them the final mastery. Developments, thus far, have hardly borne this out. The Southerners have certainly exhibited great fortitude, both in the field and at home, and have effectually falsified the calculations that their climate and peculiar institutions had taken from them the old Saxon stamina. But still there has been this noticeable fact, that they never fight at all after the first day, or, if they do, it is with greatly diminished vigor. At Antietam, they would not renew the contest at all after the first day; at Shiloh, at Fair Oaks, at Murfreesboro, in the seven days' battles before Richmond, and in every case, without an exception, where they returned to the strife, they did it with comparatively little spirit; whereas our own troops always fight better and better as the conflict is prolonged. This has now come to be so well understood, that wherever it is heard that a battle has not been decided the first day, it is, at once set down as almost certain that the final victory will be with the Northern troops.

This certainly is a strong indication that, notwithstanding the large admixture of other blood, the old tough, dogged, Anglo-Saxon stubbornness still holds its own here better than at the South. But we would not generalize too hastily. In our opinion, the supreme test, which will tell what the two populations are really made of, has not yet come. We have faith that the North will stand that decisive ordeal better than the South; but there is still too much reserved power, both for action and for resistance, in both sections, to justify, at this stage, anything like positive assertion. Our only safety lies in bracing ourselves, so far as we can, for any extremity.

REBEL COST OF LIVING IN CLOVER.—The seizure of flour by the military authorities at Richmond, Va., a month or two ago, produced a deep commotion in the Old Dominion, and was felt throughout the South. The flour taken was the property, not of merchants or speculators, but of private citizens, and the Confederate Government seized it, fixed its own price, which was below the market value, and compelled the owners to take their arbitrary valuation or nothing.

This was a degree of tyranny that Old Virginia considered dangerous, and a storm was raised about the ears of the Confederate authorities that they thought it best to heed. A milder policy was then adopted. It was ordered that whenever the Government wanted any commodity belonging to a citizen, a commission of disinterested rebels should be appointed to appraise its value, which should be paid to the owner by the agent of the Government.

The first working of this plan has just been experienced near Richmond, and the result was so remarkable that it was at once reported and read in the rebel Senate. The Quartermaster-General wanted a lot of clover hay, belonging to one M. W. MACHAUX, in Powhatan County, so he sent his agent, E. C. MOSBY, to procure it, who appointed two respectable rebels to appraise it. Mr. MOSBY writes to the Quartermaster that it is his his "melancholy duty" to advise him that the appraisers assessed the hay at "twenty dollars per hundred, delivered on the river." This is equal to $440 a ton, and as the Government must fetch it to Richmond, the total cost will exceed $450. The Richmond Sentinel says that this appraisal excited "astonishment," and it believes the country will regard it with "indignation."

It is an interesting question to discuss, how valuable a cavalry horse will get to be that is fed for any length of time on hay at $20 a hundred. And it would be worth an idle man's time to cipher out how long the $15,000,000 European loan would serve to keep Confederates "in clover" at the above rate.

The thing is so preposterous on the face of it, that it is hard to credit it as a bona fide transaction. It almost seems as if the appraisal must have been procured by the rebel authorities through collusion with the appraisers, in order to disgrace and break down the more equable impressment system, recently forced on them by popular clamor, which they find to be more inconvenient than their former plan of indiscriminate seizure of whatever they wanted.

THE POSITION AND CONDITION OF ENGLAND.

The Relations of England and the United States—The Relations of the English People to the Government—The Instability of British Power—Causes of its Decline—Ultimate Dissolution of the English Empire.

THE BRACUS, Friday, April 17, 1863.

When two nations sustain such intimate relations to one another as England and the United States, and are, at the same time, in danger of coming to hostilities, it becomes them both to understand each other and to know of each other as much as possible. This is the part of prudence. If we were at war with England we might send spies—at any rate, should take all methods of discovering her real condition. Suppose we do this beforehand. For this purpose I will give a fair statement of the condition of England, in some leading features. In the first place, we should recollect this great common fact in the condition of both countries, that England and the United States are the two greatest commercial nations of the world—both leading all other nations. But, I apprehend, very few persons, even among political and scientific men, understand another fact, that the United States have reached the full strength and power of Great Britain in navigation and commerce. This is the fact derived from the official statistical records of both Governments. I have mentioned this to very intelligent persons, and they seemed greatly surprised. Such, however, is the fact. At the same time both countries have come into the possession of inexhaustible gold mines—the basis of currency—thus increasing their commercial power, and putting in motion new machinery of trade and enterprise. Just at this time these two great nations of a common stock are running a race, pari passu, of commercial rivalry over the whole globe. Their ships enter every bay and harbor of the world, and everywhere find their own merchants, and are defended by their own guns. Their policy in regard to naval and military positions are not unlike. Take the map of the world and look at the English naval stations, and you will be struck by the remarkable cunning with which England has seized her positions. Gibraltar, Malta, Aden, Singapore, Calcutta, Shanghai, and a hundred others, are the great prizes which she has acquired by a century of almost continual war. We, on the other hand, are not destitute of such positions, although we have not gone to Europe or Asia for them. We have the Keys of Florida—the Tortugas—which command the Gulf of Mexico, and without which and Fortress Monroe, the Southern Confederacy, (even if acknowledged by ourselves and all the world,) is a mere dependency. We hold San Francisco and the Straits of Fuca, which are, or soon will be, the keys of the Pacific Ocean, and we virtually hold Liberia, which will soon command the whole West Coast of Africa. Thus in commerce and positions we are alike to a degree which makes commercial rivalry intense. But to this is superadded another thing, equally important. England has been two centuries the bull-dog of the ocean, and every man in England thinks she has a right to be. This is, certainly, very unreasonable. But it exists so that it can never be eradicated till the naval power of England is humiliated. That will be done in a few years—in the natural course of history. We need not now consider this. England knows well whence that humiliation is to come. But, with the feeling that she is now secure, she insults us with the declaration that the rebels are belligerents (legally)—by building pirate ships to help them—and appeals to her own law officers to make the law! If any complaints are made, she points to her (as she thinks) impregnable navy, and threatens to open the rebel ports. All this is entirely consistent with the principle upon which England has acquired power, which is nothing more nor less than that of her Danish ancestors—public robbery. But that is now unimportant. We want peace, and I am quite sure the Administration will do every reasonable and practicable thing to prevent war. I hope they will. But I ask, what you have asked in the TIMES, if England fits out a fleet of iron-clad ships-of-war, arms them, equips them, mans them, and furnishes them with money and provisions to pass from an English port to Charleston, and destroy, if possible, our fleet, if that is not war? Can we have a war worse than that in which England fits out a fleet (the only thing in which she has any power) to destroy our ships, and we have no power of retaliation? How can war be waged more effectu-

...ally then that? Every very woman and child knows that the South cannot let out a ship which would be worth more than a scarecrow. The perfect infamy of this, its villany, in the face of all mankind, is so great, that not only JOHN BRIGHT, but other members of Parliament, denounced the proceeding as in every way unjust. This is, of course, nothing. I should as soon expect to see a squirrel-shot penetrate the hide of a rhinoceros as an idea of justice enter the head of the venerable chemists who now governs England. Let us proceed, then, to the situation of England herself. There are many people in the world into whose heads you can beat no idea of justice, but whose instincts of safety will restrain their injustice. The English Government has shown that it sometimes has these instincts. It is very fond of bullying, but has three times been obliged to acknowledge that it took very little by it with the United States. It may do that again. The condition of England is very unpromising in regard to success in any new war. I have once before said, that the power of England culminated forty years since. She is now in the condition of the Roman Empire just after the time of AUGUSTUS. All the forms, the territories and the appearances of power remain, and it may take a long time to break them up; but probably not,—as all the forces of society now move quick, and revolutions are short. Be that as it may, here are the facts.

First, then, England cannot feed herself. She does not pretend to. This is not now a casual thing, as it was forty years ago, but it is the permanent condition of the country. For a great many years England has imported eggs from France, and beef cattle from Holland and Germany; but this was not very important, as long as she got bread. The statistics of England show that, a century ago, she exported bread; that, half a century since, she exported one year and imported next; and that now she is compelled to import, year after year, sixty millions of bushels per annum, or bread enough for ten millions of people. No comment need be made on this, except this additional fact: If you draw a wall round the south line of Russia, Poland and the Black Sea, and cut off trade with the United States, she cannot import a bit of bread. The Continent will need all the surplus of Russia. And, now, what is the attitude of England toward both Russia and the United States? She has insulted and injured both. She united with France to humiliate and degrade Russia; she insulted the United States by declaring a race of rebels—a slaveholding race (alike barbarous and inexcusable)—on a level with the free people and Government of the United States; and then added injury to insult by building pirate ships. This is the sort of conciliation she offers to Russia and the United States—Sebastopol and pirate ships. Will Russia and the United States, on whom she is dependent for daily bread, forget these things? Perhaps the Ethiopian will change his skin and the leopard his spots.

Secondly—Another fact, not at all noticed now in England, is equally pregnant with instruction. England and the United States are to-day on a level in commerce and navigation; but, for the future, the United States have tenfold the means of increasing their commerce and their navy which England has. It is hardly too much to say, that the single State of Maine has means and facilities for shipbuilding equal to those of all England; and that New-England, New-York and New-Jersey have the means of creating a commerce and navigation more than equal to all that of Great Britain. It is equally certain that in a few years no nation can compete with the United States, on the Pacific, where our fine ports on the Western coast of America will command everything. This England, perhaps, understands, and hence it is she wants to divide and weaken this country. If something of this sort is not done, the United States will, in thirty years, far surpass England in commerce and naval power. England does not love the South, but she hates the Government of the United States, which represents the strength, freedom and commerce of the American nation.

Thirdly—The Government of England is the last remains of the feudal aristocracy. It is, and has been very strong, by virtue of that fact. But it is a pure feudal aristocracy. The workingmen of England have no political power. The only people who could modify or restrain the original aristocracy were the commercial men. England being an island, commerce must be her main business; and the feudal aristocracy had to bend so far as to encourage commerce. Hence it was the borough got into Parliament, then the Reform bills, &c. The commercial element alone controlled the aristocracy; but now commerce and aristocracy have made a close alliance. The princely merchant is made a Peer, and the Lords vote Corn laws. The result is what we see, the real workingman of England ground down to just as few ounces of bread as he can live upon, with no vote and no schools. Is this the virtuous result of humanity and religion, upon which England asks the praises of the world, and lauds herself as if she were some Christian saint? But there is a Divine retribution which no human hand can put aside. The aristocracy of England chose to convert their country into a great shop, and put aside the laws of nature, of freedom and humanity. In that they have given her the death-blow. They have made England dependent upon foreigners for bread. In this situation the aristocracy of England must fight their last fight. It will be the last fight which a class, pretending, by some claim of law, usage, or divine decree, to govern mankind, will ever make. It is no wonder that they sympathize with slaveholders, (barbarous as they are,) for their claim to right rests on exactly the same foundation.

I know not the future. I would not utter one word to disturb the peaceful relations of England and the United States. But is it not better that we should all understand just where we are, and just what we are? A great many of the wars of the world have arisen from mere want of information. In this age of the world, such a thing would be inexcusable. Let England understand clearly that honesty is just now her best policy, and perhaps she may be induced to pursue it.

LUCILLE WESTERN IN BROOKLYN.—Last night Miss WESTERN was greeted by a tremendous house, and played with great success in "Don Cesar de Bazan" and the "Loan of a Lover." To-night she will appear as Lucretia Borgia. Miss WESTERN is a favorite in Brooklyn, and seems to meet there the popular encouragement she deserves.

GOTTSCHALK'S MATINEE.—Mr. GOTTSCHALK gives a grand matinee at the Brooklyn Academy to-morrow, for which he presents a most attractive programme.

THE PILOT OF THE KEOKUK.—In reference to a paragraph stating that the pilot of the iron-clad Keokuk ran her ashore in order that the rebels might capture her, we have the very best authority for saying that the Keokuk was not in charge of a pilot at any time at Charleston, and was not run upon Morris Island, but sunk about one mile from the beach, while an effort was being made to tow her into smoother water, and to get her ashore to the south.

GUN RELATIONS WITH ENGLAND.

The Purchase of Cotton from the Rebels—The Cotton Loan—The Sale of Munitions of War—The Construction and Fitting Out of Ships of War, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, April 28, 1863.

It was lucky that Mr. SEWARD did not yield to the importunities of Lord LYONS in regard to the purchase of cotton from the rebels. It is now clear that the object was to prepare the way for the fifteen million loan, and to secure for it a firm basis of credit. It is not improbable that the purchases made already by British and French merchants, without the guaranteed right of exportation, are held in the expectation that they can be applied to the redemption of the loan. But certainly the Government will not suffer all the purposes of the blockade to be evaded in this way. The recognition of the right of purchase was of more than doubtful propriety, even when it was merely to gratify the imperious demand for cotton; but when it has become apparent that the real purpose was to enable the rebels to raise funds for carrying on the war against the Government, every transaction of the kind should be repudiated, and the cotton thus purchased, when found, should be confiscated, without benefit of clergy. For if this course is not pursued, we shall have opened the door to indefinite purchases, and we shall have laid the foundations of Confederate loans of indefinite extent. The Government should strike at the root of them, by letting it be known that all cotton found in the rebel lines, and especially such as has been purchased on foreign account, will be confiscated; and that payments must be made to the Government of the United States. On these terms the foreign buyers can have the cotton, but not otherwise. There can be no hardship to the purchaser by adopting this regulation, since it can be of no consequence to an honest neutral who gets the pay.

On the other hand, if payment has been made in advance of shipment in contraband goods which have run the blockade, the purchaser of cotton on such terms will deserve to lose his investment or to pay for it twice.

The friends of America in England make a distinction between the sale of munitions of war, and the fitting out of ships of war in neutral ports. The former can be carried on with so much privacy, and has been so long sanctioned by the practice of nations, that no headway can be made in opposition to it. The Government of the United States finds itself compromised, both as buyer and seller of arms and ammunition, and cannot therefore, with consistency, oppose the practice when it happens to operate against us. During the present rebellion, we have bought arms in Europe to use against the rebels, and our merchants have sold supplies to the French in their unholy crusade against the Mexicans. We are therefore in no situation to protest against the sales of a similar kind made by English and other foreign merchants to the rebels, except on the ground that they are making war upon the Government of the United States, in order to establish what England and France by their laws denominate and punish as piracy. If they are willing to stultify themselves before the world by becoming the aiders and abettors of this grand scheme for nationalizing piracy, well and good. It is a question of taste. The fact will only show their professed abhorrence of the Slave-trade, during three-quarters of a century, to have been hypocritical; that's all.

But as it regards the construction or fitting out of ships-of-war in neutral harbors, to prey upon the commerce of a friendly nation, the case is quite different. On this issue with our English neighbors we have the laws of nations on our side, and England could not persist in her indifference, or affected blindness to the fact, that her shipyards were fast becoming the navy-yards of the American rebels, without justly subjecting herself to the charge of hostility to this Government. It is highly gratifying to see that a change has taken place in her policy, and to be informed that these intended piratical sea-rovers will not be permitted to sail. There can be no doubt that Lords PALMERSTON and RUSSELL were helped to this wise conclusion by the law lately enacted in Congress authorizing the President to issue letters-of-marque and reprisal. I concur entirely with Mr. SUMNER as to the impolicy of issuing such letters as long as the great Powers of Europe show a disposition to be really neutral; but at the same time I rejoice at the authority given to the President, and I cannot doubt that the altered policy of England is mainly attributable to it.

I happen to know that the ablest and best friends of the United States in England have drawn attention to the distinction above pointed out, between the sale by neutrals of munitions of war, and the construction or fitting out of ships of war. They were naturally apprehensive of unnecessary complications as likely to arise from confounding the two practices as identical in principle. Happily we have the right, under the laws of nations, to treat the far greater source of injury to our cause as a hostile act; while the other is of no great consequence, since the rebels have within themselves ample means of manufacturing cannon and ammunition.

The English Government and aristocracy have shown unmistakable solicitude to see the American Union dissolved, but, at the same time, they are not willing to incur the expense and dangers of an open war. They did whatever they could to aid the rebels, as long as they could do so without the danger of drifting into war with us. They saw clearly, what has been pointed out on this side of the Atlantic, that the issue of letters-of-marque would be fruitful of collisions with the English merchant-ships. It was a danger to both sides, and one which they had as much reason to avoid as we. Hence, while the premature resort to the practice would have done much harm, and might have precipitated hostilities, the legislative provision for bringing it into play, whenever it was apparent that hostilities would have resulted independently of it, from the unfriendly spirit of the English ruling classes, has had the opposite effect of putting that Government on its guard to avoid hostilities.

Even the best men connected with the British Government find it necessary to defend the policy of avowed "neutrality," as a thing as inevitable as the law of gravity. I have been struck with this fact in reading the recent speech of the Duke of Argyle, which has been copied into the American newspapers. His Grace, while professing the profoundest respect and regard for Mr. SUMNER, and the "noble cause" to which he has devoted his life, speaks of the imperious necessity which constrains the English Government to observe a strict neutrality. When it is remembered that the "noble cause" referred to is freedom—the freedom of the African race—that the Duke of Argyle, who is, I believe, a brother-in-law of the Duchess of Sutherland, has always professed to regard it as sacred; that the rebels are avowedly engaged in a war for the extension and perpetuation of Slavery, and the revival of the African Slave-trade; and, furthermore, that England has often taken part in foreign wars, in which she had no special concern, from pretended motives of sympathy with the oppressed and down-trodden, we can properly appreciate the consistency and sincerity of this talk about the necessity of neutrality.

MOBILE AND ITS APPROACHES.

The Fleet There Blockading—Forts Gaines and Morgan—Rebel Ruse—Obstructions in Mobile Harbor.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

BLOCKADING FLEET, OFF MOBILE, Saturday, April 4, 1863.

The precise locality and surroundings of Mobile are these: It is situated forty miles west of Pensacola, and is the most important port of entry on the Gulf, excepting, of course, New-Orleans. There are two railroads running from it, which connect it with the great national routes, and the River Mobile and its two large branches—the Tombigbee and Alabama—which are navigable for steamboats of moderate draft for several hundred miles—also make very important connections with the interior of the country. The entrance to its bay lies between Sand Island, on which the light-house is erected, and a shoal verging off from Mobile Point, making a long, narrow and dangerous projection from the mainland, some 16 miles in length. On the bar of the deepest and widest channel the water is 21 feet in depth. The pass between Petit Bois and Horn Islands has water 16 feet deep, and is the nearest and safest refuge from southeast or southwest gales; but, notwithstanding this, the port is neither a safe or pleasant one for vessels in a storm. From the Bay of Mobile westward a line of low sand islands lie parallel to the coast, forming Mississippi Sound, which is navigable for light-draft vessels, and through it, until the capture of New-Orleans, a large trade was carried on with that city, by way of Bayou St. John and Lake Ponchartrain. This sound communicates with Mobile through a pass called Grassy; and there are other modes of communication with the Gulf from it, viz., between Petit Bois Islands and Dauphine, between Horn Islands and Petit Bois, and beyond Horn Islands.

The fleet blockading this port and its passes are: Colorado, Capt. GORDESCHEVER, anchored off the entrance to the main ship channel; three-quarters of a mile west by north from her is the Lackawanna, Capt. MADDOCKS; to the westward again of her is the Kennebec, Lieut.-Commander RUSSELL; to the eastward, first, the R. R. Cuyler, Capt. EMMONS; next the Arcadia, Lieut.-Commander FRANKLIN; then the Pembina, Lieut.-Commander YOUNG; also, the Kanawha, Lieut.-Commander MAYO, and the Pinola, Lieut.-Commander STILWELL. The last four are gunboats of the "twenty-three class." The Pocahontas is away at present, having gone to Pensacola for coal and supplies. The vessels here named form a regular semi-circular cordon on the mouth of the harbor of Mobile, making it by this arrangement almost an impossibility for them to mistake a vessel running in or out. A bright lookout is kept every night for the enemy, as we have received intelligence that there are three or four rams at Mobile, and a 50-gun frigate, about to visit us and use us up. It is asserted that the greatest care and attention have been given to the minutest details in the construction of these vessels, and that the best of engineering skill that could be obtained has been called to their aid, and that they are supplied with batteries of the most improved description and formidable character. We are ready, however, for them, and will try to treat them with all the respect and attention they deserve should they visit us. Fort Morgan, on the right, and Fort Gaines, on the left, have been thoroughly repaired, and mounted with a portion of the heaviest armament possessed by the rebels. Some of this armament consists of rifle-cannon, which they assert are very effective, and will throw a ball four miles, and prove utterly destructive to all that comes within contact with it. These forts display a large amount of "bunting," whenever any of the blockading fleet practice target-firing.

On the left of the harbor, between the bar and Fort Gaines, are three rows of heavy piling, stretching for two miles in length. This is so arranged that an attacking fleet would be obliged to first face the fire of Fort Gaines, and then in passing shear off in the direction of the piles, and run close under the fire of Fort Morgan.

This arrangement is such that it presents a very serious obstacle to an attack upon these places, and they must necessarily be removed before such an event can successfully take place.

Our mails are very irregular, and we, in consequence of this, are in the dark of doings at the North. Fresh meat is also very scarce with us—in fact, we seem like a lot of outcasts from civilization and the world. Our only sight of land consists of a long line of sand-bars, ornamented with the two dark, formidable, inhospitable, threatening forts alluded to—and this is not the pleasantest of sights. But still we do our duty, and remember that war, when it is honest, earnest war, has its redeeming features; and we remember, too, that our country is passing through a fearful trial, such as it has but once before felt, and we are content. We glory in being beneath the proud folds of our flag, and there we will ever be, whether in the hour of victory or in the hour of reverse.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

NEW STEAMBOAT FOR ALBANY AND NEW-YORK.—The new steamboat City of Albany, intended for the passenger and freight trade between this City and Albany, built by Messrs. BRAMHAM & LAWLER, of the latter city, has been completed, and furnished throughout in the most richest manner by her owners. She is to take her regular place on the morning line, on Monday next, leaving New-York on the alternate mornings, at 7 o'clock, from the foot of Harrison-street, North River. The City of Albany is 215 feet in length and 36 feet in width, and her model was designed to attain great speed with a light draft of water. She draws four feet of water only, and will be able to pass safely over the bars at lowest tide. The engines are very superior, and were built by Messrs. CORNELL & SHARPES. She is owned by HENRY SHERZ, Esq., of the First Ward—the Ex-Alderman.

MISSION MEETING.—The City Tract Society held a missionary meeting on Tuesday evening, in the South Dutch Church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-first-street, Mr. WYCKOFF presiding. Several interesting practical statements of results, illustrating the practical operations of this system of domiciliary visitation, by a variety of incidents, showing the good accomplished among all classes of our population. Rev. Dr. BOGERT, the pastor of the Church, expressed his satisfaction at the facts stated, and encouraged the laborers in their work. In the statistical tables given, we find, among other items, the following: Tracts distributed, 64,600; volumes loaned, 874; children to Sunday School, 315; persons to Church, 397; meetings, 353, and conversions, 52.

AFFAIRS IN MINNESOTA.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

ST. PAUL, MINN., Saturday, April 18, 1863.

Four days ago a returned party of scouts brought into Fort Snelling an Indian warrior of the Sioux tribe, whom they had captured a short distance from Fort Ridgely. He was easily taken, having offered no resistance to his captors, and stated that he was approaching the settlements in order to hear from his father, who is one of the condemned at Mankato, and his mother is held in custody at the Fort Snelling encampment. A small band of eight lodges has been seen by the scouts several times hovering around the border settlements and committing trifling depredations. It was at once supposed that this captive belonged to one of these lodges, and recent developments tend very strongly to substantiate the supposition. Upon being closely questioned, the prisoner (who rejoices in the name of Red Cloud) stated that he had just left a small band of Sioux who were prowling around the settlements in search of plunder, and they told him they wanted horses, and should take them wherever they might find them. This communication was made at Fort Snelling, on Tuesday, the 14th inst., and this morning a messenger arrived at Gen. SIBLEY's Headquarters, with dispatches from Col. MILLER, at Mankato, giving an account of an attack on a small post situated on the Wantonwan River, about forty-five miles south of Mankato. This post was occupied by a garrison of twenty-one men, and the Commander estimates the attacking party to consist of at least fifty men. This is probably an error, as the attack was made at 2 A. M., when it was very dark, and therefore impossible to recognize the enemy clearly enough to determine his numbers. Undoubtedly this force was the same one spoken of by the Indian prisoner above referred to. They rushed on to the camp with that unearthly scream and yell peculiar to their race, and it is very easy for any person, who listens for the first time to their demoniac shouts as they rush to battle, to suppose their force much greater than it really is. This absurdity is one on purpose to terrify their opponents, and give them an exaggerated idea of their strength. Whatever the strength of the assaulting party was, it is sufficient to say they were repulsed, but not before they had killed one elected man of the Seventh Minnesota Volunteers, and one boy. Two women were wounded and three or four men. There is no reason for supposing that the Indians lost a man, as no bodies were left behind, and they carried away with them several horses. Col. MILLER, upon being informed of this startling event, immediately sent a force of well-mounted cavalry in pursuit, and if the redskins are captured they will be summarily dealt with. This outrage has again stricken the inhabitants of the border settlements with terror, and many are fleeing from an expected crusade of the savages. It is, however, not probable that any considerable force of the enemy are in the vicinity of the settlement at which the attack took place. The majority of the warriors of the Dacotahs are wending their way to a common rendezvous at Devil's Lake.

FLANDRAU.

NEW-JERSEY.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.—An accident occurred on the New-York and Erie Railway, at Jersey City, yesterday forenoon, resulting in the death of a little girl ten years of age, named MARY MEHAN, and probable fatal injury to a flagman, in an attempt to save her life. The little girl attempted to cross the track at the Erie-street crossing just as a locomotive and tender were backing up, and the flagman, named DAVID D. MAPPEY, seeing that she was in imminent peril, and would be run over, sprung forward, and attempted to rescue her, when he was struck on the head by the tender, and knocked prostrate upon the track. The wheels passed over his right leg and arm, crushing and nearly severing them. The little girl was also knocked down, and the wheels passing over her body, crushed and mangled her in a horrible manner, and caused instant death. The remains were conveyed to the residence of her parents, corner of Third and Erie streets. MAPPEY was conveyed to his home, No. 179 South Third-street, where his arm and leg were amputated by Dr. QUINBY; but, owing to the great loss of blood, his life is despaired of.

FOUND DROWNED.—Last evening, the body of an unknown man, apparently an Irishman, about 60 years of age, with gray hair and whiskers, was found floating in the ferry slip of the Jersey City Ferry. Deceased was about 5 feet, 6 or 10 inches in height; was dressed in a brown or black coarse jacket, figured vest, brown ribbed pants, cloth shoes, white cotton socks, white shirt and red under-shirt. The body, which had apparently been in the water but a few hours, was taken in charge by Coroner FARRELL.

THE SUMMER MOON WAS SHINING,
All in the purple sky,
My wife and I we tossed about,
And could not close an eye.
I cursed and swore, she scolded me
All through the weary night,
But 'twas enough to vex a saint,
The bed-bugs' savage bite.
You may be sure I certain went
Next morn to LYON's store,
And home in joyful triumph I
Th' Magnetic Powder bore,
Which quickly slaughtered every bug,
Mosquito, roach and flea.

OFFICE OF ASSISTANT COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF STORES, No. 4 Street, New-York, April 28, 1863.

Sealed proposals will be received at this office, until 4 o'clock P. M., on TUESDAY, the 12th of May, 1863, for furnishing DESICCATED AND COMPRESSED MIXED VEGETABLES, for issue to the United States troops, for the term of one year, from the November next, at the rate of one hundred and thirty-five thousand pounds per month.

The ingredients of the mixed vegetables furnished under the contracts of the current year are as follows, viz.: To each hundred pounds of the mixed vegetables, twenty pounds of potatoes, twenty-two pounds of white turnips, twenty-two pounds of carrots, ten pounds of cabbage, ten pounds of onions, five pounds of string beans, five pounds of tomatoes, one pound of celery or parsley, and five pounds of rice or barley. The article is materially improved by diminishing the quantity of some of the coarser vegetables and increasing some of the others, as well as by introducing some vegetables not heretofore used, proposers are invited to send in proposals with accompanying samples of the mixture of the above given, but also of other mixtures, varying therefrom according to the experience and judgment of the proposer, with a view of effecting an improvement in this article of military supply. Proposers are required to give the exact proportions of the different ingredients of the material supplied, with a price for a pound of each, packed as required. When it is practicable, each of the vegetables in a separate state, and after desiccation, will be submitted for inspection. Only those parts of the vegetables commonly used as food will be accepted for the mixtures.

The mixed vegetables are to be compactly compressed into cakes of seven pounds each, ten of these cakes being packed in a tin or pine box, made airtight, with inside dimensions of 16 inches by 8 inches, of suitable seasoned stuff, not less than five-eighths of an inch thick, with sunken ends one inch thick, strengthened with outside lining pieces. Boxes to be strapped with hickory at the ends.

The boxes must be as far as practicable, be accompanied with at least one box as above described, with contents of the proposer's own manufacture of each of the articles he may offer to furnish.

The location of the manufacturing establishment must be stated.

There being a choice among the different varieties of vegetables, proposers will state with precision the especial varieties they use, or propose to use, in their mixtures.

Each bid, to have consideration, must contain the written assurance of the proposer, in substance, that

PREPARATIONS FOR A MOVEMENT.

Gen. Grant's Whole Army to Move with Six Days' Rations.

CAIRO, Thursday, April 30.

A dispatch from Milliken's Bend the 24th, says orders were yesterday issued for the whole army to march with six days' rations.

A special Memphis dispatch says: Advices from Young's Point to Sunday say that Gen. GRANT was at Carthage. It was thought that the rebel rams up the Yazoo were ready to come out. A raft has been cut to pieces, having floated out. It is doubtful whether any of the six transports, which attempted to run the batteries of Vicksburgh on the night of the 22d succeeded in passing. Four of them are known to be sunk. The other two, if they got by, are badly damaged. The firing on the transports was terrific. Commencing at midnight, it continued till daylight.

The Official Reports of Running the Vicksburgh Batteries.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 30.

The detailed reports of Admiral PORTER'S passage of the Vicksburgh batteries have been received at the Navy Department. The vessels comprising the expedition started in the following order, 50 yards apart: Benton, Lieut.-Commander GWIN; Lafayette, Capt. WALKER, with the Gen. Price lashed on the starboard side; Louisville, Lieut.-Commander OWEN; Mound City, Lieut. WILSON; Pittsburgh, Lieut. HALL; Carondelet, Lieut. MURPHY, and Tuscumbia, Lieut.-Commander SHIRK, with the tug Dey, which was lashed to the Benton. The three army transports were in the rear of these vessels, and the Tuscumbia was placed astern of all to see that the transports did not turn back. Two of the transports, when the firing became heavy, attempted to run up stream, but Lieut.-Commander SHIRK drove them back and staid behind them until the Forest Queen was disabled. He then took her in tow and placed her out of reach of the enemy's shot. All the vessels except the Benton took coal barges in tow, and all except the Lafayette brought them safely past the batteries. Having the Price alongside, the Lafayette did not manage very well, and the coal barge got adrift, but was picked up at Carthage. The Louisville, Lieut.-Commander OWEN, lost here in the melee, but picked it up again. While under fire, the Benton was beautifully handled by her pilot, Mr. WILLIAMS, who was in the Essex when she ran the batteries. He kept the vessel's guns bearing on the town and water batteries all the time while drifting down. The guns of the Benton fired over 80 shell, well directed into the town and batteries. The Pittsburgh, Mound City and Tuscumbia were more fortunate than the others in not turning round as they came by, although no ill results happened to those vessels which did turn. The pilots were deceived by a large fire started on the side opposite to Vicksburgh by the rebels, for the purpose of showing the vessels more plainly. Fires being started on both sides of the river at once, the vessels had some narrow escapes, but were saved in most instances by the precautions taken to protect them. They were covered with heavy logs and bales of wet hay, which was found to be an excellent defence. Admiral PORTER speaks in terms of the highest praise respecting the conduct of all Commanders, saying:

"They carried out my orders to the best of their ability, having great difficulties to contend with—strong currents and dangerous eddies, giving fires in every direction, that bothered the pilots; smoke almost enveloping the squadron, and a very heavy fire on the vessels that were fair targets for the enemy. I have no cause to be dissatisfied with the result. No one was killed. Only one or two were badly wounded, and there were only twelve casualties in all. The enemy's shot were of the heaviest calibre, and some were of excellent pattern. No material damage was done by those coming on board, beyond smashing the bulwarks. No lives were lost on the Henry Clay, which was burnt and sunk while passing the batteries. Most of the crew were picked up and others got away in the yawl.

The reports from the commanders of the different vessels, accompanying Admiral PORTER'S dispatch, all testify to the extreme difficulties experienced in this hazardous, though eminently successful expedition. The Benton, bearing Admiral PORTER'S flag, passed within forty yards of the town; and those on board could hear the rattling of falling walls after our fires. Her Acting Ensign, EDWARD C. BRENNAN, was wounded and three others. The Lafayette received nine effective round and cannon shots through her casemates, while closely engaged with the rebel batteries. The Pittsburgh received no material damage, though struck seven times. No casualties occurred on board. The Mound City proved a splendid target for the enemy, in consequence of the bonfires which were kindled opposite the Point, and who kindled himself of the opportunity by sending a two-inch shot through each casemate, lasting each through the iron on the starboard side, and wounding four men. Besides this she was struck four times while abreast these batteries, but sustained no injury from them. The Tuscumbia, which had charge of the transports, mentioned in Admiral PORTER'S report, experienced considerable difficulty. For when the two transports turned up the stream, the Tuscumbia stopped under the very heavy fire of the enemy until the Henry Clay was set on fire and the Forest Queen turned around. After this, and while the Tuscumbia was drifting in order to keep her proper place in the line, she struck the Louisiana bank of the river but soon got off without damage. In backing down to get her bow down the stream, she got foul of the transport Forest Queen, and the two vessels remained together several minutes. This collision seemed to cause the rebels great joy, and her commander says, for a few moments the fire from the shore seemed to be concentrated upon the Tuscumbia and Forest Queen, but, providentially, none of the shot did much damage. She was here struck below the water line, starting seven planks and causing the vessel to leak freely; but, by the use of syphon pumps, she was soon brought under control. The Tuscumbia also, when the Forest Queen became disabled, took her in tow, and landed her on the Louisiana shore. Notwithstanding the trials she experienced, no casualties occurred on board. The Louisiana was struck four times. No damage was sustained.

The Department has also received official information of the destruction of the ram Queen of the West, in Berwick's Bay, after a fight of twenty minutes; also, the a destruction of the Diana and Hart. At later dates, our forces were impowerful of two other vessels, which are believed to be the only rebel vessels now in these waters.

THE SIEGE OF VICKSBURGH.

A Great Change in the Aspect of Affairs—Active Operations with a View to the Reduction of the City—Running the Rebel Batteries—A Good Prospect of Final Success—Arrival of Confederate Commissioners, &c.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

NEAR VICKSBURGH, Monday, April 20, 1863.

A most astonishing change has come over the character of affairs in this vicinity within the last fortnight. Where once was nothing but stagnation, all is now activity. Soldiers who, a short time since, amused their leisure weeks by pitching quoits or lounging around the levees, may now be seen, knapsack on back and musket on shoulder, marching inland, evidently bound on missions of importance. The gunboats, having finished their explorations of the bayous in Mississippi and Louisiana, and gone down the river, are ere this revealing themselves to the rebellious denizens of Grand Gulf and Red River.

Even the steamboats, which have heretofore been devoted to the purpose of furnishing offices to Provost-Marshals, Commissaries, Quartermasters and the like, have turned out their contents, have fortified themselves with cotton, and passed down the river, or will soon go down to aid the gunboats in their patriotic labors below. Hourly transports reach here from above, whose triple decks are black, or rather blue with soldiers; every moment is heard the jingle of sabres, as squadrons of cavalry gallop along and disappear toward the interior; these, with the grinding of artillery wheels, the lowing of cattle and braying of mules, together with the thousand other sights and sounds that attend an army in motion, indicate that the vast forces in this vicinity have suddenly been stirred from their lethargy and are now in a condition of full activity.

Things actually begin to look warlike. The negroes, who for months have been engaged in the peaceful occupation of ditching the State of Louisiana, have laid down the shovel and the hoe, and under direction of Gen. THOMAS, are preparing to take up the musket and fight for that birthright of which they have been so long deprived; the rebels at Vicksburgh, who for months have thronged the streets of that city in full security of life and limb, now find it a less pleasant matter, for the reason that at short intervals sixty pounds of iron from a Federal battery are scattered in fragments through the place. This feature of our present activity is ungallant so far as it affects the ladies of Vicksburgh. Formerly, when our boats ran the batteries they did not return the rebel fire, and hence such occasions were full of interest to the fair sex of Vicksburgh; they would witness the sallies of a Yankee boat running under the tremendous fire of the rebel guns without the slightest danger to themselves; and at times their hatred of the invader was gratified by seeing a boat sunk, and they had rare fun in observing its crew of heroes struggling in the water, whose surface was beat into foam by the shot and shell rained among the struggling drowning wretches, by the exultant chivalry.

All this was rare fun, and I doubt not that when the gunboats ran down the other night, they prepared themselves for a repetition of the harmless sport that had hitherto been enjoyed. It is said that the fire kindled by the rebels revealed the streets and sides of the bluffs crowded with people, who had turned out to witness the glorious fun of a hundred guns belching their iron contents upon a hitherto unresisting foe. One can however imagine the astonishment and chagrin of the gleeful crowd, when twenty-five monster guns suddenly poured twenty-five charges of grape into their very midst, and how sudden was the termination that was placed to their sport of watching the passage and "peppering" of non-combatant steamers.

For these reasons the thing has become serious even to the rebels—they too will be affected by our movements, and, like ourselves, will be forced into a state of activity.

Whether our activity will result beneficially to us, is a question which time only can settle. We have run below with a view, I suppose, of attacking the rebel works at some weaker point than is presented above. Had we done the same thing two months ago we should not have given the rebels so long a time to strengthen their works down the river; and, in addition, we should have been able to do what can be done before the hot weather sets in. One thing is evident—either this last movement will secure the capture of Vicksburgh, or it will force us to abandon this position, move our army off the river, and approach the place from another direction. The gunboats are down there, and they never can return, unless they first take Vicksburgh; this fact alone renders it certain that our present move is a final one, and will result either in the speedy reduction of Vicksburgh, or our abandonment of the siege.

A very short time will decide the case. Whatever we can do at all will be done quickly, and the question relative to Vicksburgh settled. I think the chances for taking the place are better now than at any time since our arrival. We shall undoubtedly be able to obtain a position on the high ground somewhere between Grand Gulf and Vicksburgh; and in such a case we shall find ourselves to some extent upon an equality with the enemy. There are, however, two bad features in our new position—the line of communication with the base of supplies is long and difficult; and in the second case, we are liable at any moment to the irruption of rebel rams from the Yazoo River, whose ability to inflict damage upon us is incalculable. Both these drawbacks will probably be, to a greater or less extent, remedied; the new canal will obviate the one, and a reinforcement of iron-clads at this point the other difficulty.

In view of these facts, I think, upon the whole, that our chances of taking Vicksburgh are decidedly bettered; and that within a very short time the country may reasonably expect to hear encouraging news from this Department.

In my last letter relative to the running of the batteries, I stated that the transport Henry Clay was abandoned by her crew, (except the pilot,) while her hull was uninjured, and while with a little exertion she might have been saved. Some of the crew, who have since reached here, state that when they left her, the water had risen over her main deck. In this case, the men are not blamable for her loss. To-night or to-morrow night several more transports—probably six in all—will endeavor to run the batteries and join the fleet now at New-Carthage. If four of the six get through, or if even half of them are successful, the operation will pay, for, with that addition to the fleet of transports below, we shall be able to move any desired number of troops to any point.

The Forest Queen, which was disabled by receiving a shot through her steam-drum in running the batteries, is lying just out of range this side of Warrenton, and will be repaired in time to proceed below to-night. During her passage down, her Commander, Capt. CONWAY, stood out on the hurricane deck, with a lighted cigar in his mouth, which was still smoking when they reached a point of safety below. This specimen of coolness is hard to excel, although it was perhaps equaled by Lieut. O'NEIL, the volunteer pilot of the Silver Wave. He threw back all the ashes of the pilot-house, and went by the batteries yelling defiance at the rebels with every stroke of the paddles. One would naturally suppose that when a person could, without detriment to his dignity and duty, interpose a few cotton bales between himself and a storm of iron death, that he would do it; but this was not done by either CONWAY or O'NEIL.

The Forest Queen received twelve shots; one shell burst in her bar, and destroyed an immense amount of whisky, champagne and other liquorings, sufficient, in fact, to furnish a regiment of rebels with materials for a half dozen charges upon Yankee works. Only one shot struck the Silver Wave—that passed through portions of six bales of hay and lodged in a coal pile.

Gen. THOMAS is reviewing troops and making himself generally useful. His mission out here, although it probably did not cause the present activity, will tend materially to keep it in existence.

Three Confederate Commissioners, Capt. SCRUGGS, G. B. FIELD and Chaplain LIVSANEES, have been appointed for the District lying on the west side of the Mississippi, and extending from Napoleon, Arkansas, to Red River. The following is the substance of the intentions of the Government, as shown in the instructions issued to the Commissioners:

The Government of the United States, in order to secure the safety of commerce and navigation on the Mississippi River, has determined to locate on and near its banks a loyal population who will protect (instead of destroying, as is now done,) the freedom of commerce, etc., on this inland sea. * * * In lieu of rent, a tax will be collected upon the products of the land, payable to such agents in the Treasury Department shall designate.

Negroes not subject to any punishment.

Upon entering into the occupancy of plantations, inspectors will visit each plantation and take an inventory of all property upon the estate; crops yet ungathered will be turned over to be gathered by the lessees, upon such terms as shall secure to the Government its fair share, while all movable property, stock, grain, etc., shall be taken possession of by Government or sold to the lessee if he so desires, at the appraised value, payable out of the produce of the plantation in the Fall.

As many negroes of average quality as he desires shall be turned over to the lessee upon the order of the Commissioners, the lessee to employ them to Feb. 1, 1864, and feed, clothe and treat humanely all thus turned over—the clothing to be deducted from the wages and furnished at cost.

Wages as follows: All able-bodied men over 18 years of age, $7 per month; all able-bodied women over 18 years of age, $4; children between 12 and 18, half price; children under 12, not to be used as field hands. Families will be kept together when desired by themselves.

The tax on the production shall be at the rate of $3 for each bale of cotton of 400 pounds, and 5 cents per bushel on corn and potatoes.

All troops will be required to give protection, when it can be done without injury to the service; and it is confidently believed that the military organization of the negroes will afford all necessary protection.

Each lessee will be obliged to take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

This gives in brief the intentions of the Government toward rebel property in this vicinity. A few days ago the Commissioners proceeded to a point some thirty-five miles above here and took possession of fifteen deserted plantations lying in the neighborhood of what is known as Goodrich's Landing. Five of these—containing in all about 15,000 acres—have been let to one man, a Mr. MONTAGUE, a resident of Louisiana, and who claims the distinction of being the only Union man in the State.

Reasonable doubts may be entertained of the common report that these lessees are to be allowed to employ the rebel owners of the property leased, to work their plantations. It will be a repetition, on a small scale, of the general management of the war. Our troops will be necessarily scattered, while the enemy will concentrate and attack us under great disadvantage to our forces, at unexpected points along our line. Whether the Government had not better turn its attention less to agriculture and more to war, is a question that will admit of discussion. Soldiers, possibly, at present can be as profitably employed in moving against the enemy as in guarding cotton plantations. The complex and cumbrous machinery of Commissioners, Inspectors, Agents, Tax Collectors, Lessees, Soldiery, &c., will be hard to run, and in the end, will probably cost the Government more than the profit. I do not know how it is in the East, but in the West, secession is alive, vigorous and formidable, and it needs every available energy of the Government to secure its suppression.

The river has commenced falling, and simultaneously the banks and guerrillas have made their appearance. The Eagle was fired into yesterday at Carson's Landing, above White River, and another boat at Gaines' Landing, above Greenville.

I suppose it is not contraband to state that very heavy bodies of troops have moved from this place to New-Carthage, preparatory to crossing the river and operating against points below. Within a very short time—as soon as the six transports going past the batteries to-morrow night reach their position and repair damages—there will be stirring news from that point.

STATEMENT OF THE FIRST OFFICER.

The following is the First Officer's statement:

"The Anglo Saxon left Liverpool on the 16th inst., at 5 P. M. She experienced strong westerly gales until Saturday, the 25th, at 5 P. M., when she fell in with ice and a thick fog. The engines were immediately slowed. At 10 P. M. the fog became thick and heavy, the engines stopped altogether, a light breeze from the south freezing the ship ahead about one knot an hour. At 5 A. M. on the 26th the fog lifted, and the ice having slacked, we set the foretopsails and head-sails, moving the engines occasionally at a dead slow. At 10½ A. M. the fog cleared away altogether, and we saw clear water to the west-northwest from the masthead. We continued our course toward clear water. At 3 P. M. we got the ship clear of ice, and steered northwest by west with full speed, and with all possible sail. A moderate breeze was blowing from the southward at this time—at noon, lat. 46° 37', lon. 47° 24' by the chronometer. At 10 P. M. the breeze freshened, and blew strongly from the south-southwest, and it began to fog up. It took us ashore at 8 A. M. on the 27th. The fog still continued to be dense, and supposing the ship to be forty miles off Cape Race, we altered her course to the west, half North, and slowed the engines to half speed, which we supposed would have taken us 17 miles south of Cape Race. At ten minutes past 11 A. M., breakers were reported on the starboard beam. Capt. BURGESS immediately ordered the engines to be reversed at full speed, but before her head way could be stopped she struck fast on the rocks off Clam Cove, about four miles north of Cape Race. A heavy sea rolling in drove her quarter on the rocks, carrying away her rudder and propeller. We found that there was no possibility of the ship coming off, the order was given to let go both anchors to hold the ship on the rocks. The carpenter was forthwith sent to examine the fore peak, and found it filling fast with water. He also examined the fore-hatch, but found no water there. The chief engineer coming up immediately afterward reported the forward stokehole filling fast. He opened the valves and blew the steam out of the boilers. The boats were all immediately lowered successfully, except No. 1 and No. 3. The ship was so close on the rocks these could not be got out. Boat No. 4 with some of the crew and passengers, commanded by Capt. CRAWFORD, was sent to find a place to land the passengers. Some of the crew being landed on the rocks by means of the studding-sail boom, with the help of some of the passengers, got a hawser secured to a rock to keep the vessel from listing out. We then commenced to land the female passengers on the rocks by means of the forward-yard-arm. The females passengers were put into a boat. At about noon the ship's stern swung off from the rocks, and she settled down very fast, listing to port at the same time, and sunk in deep water. The Captain and a great many passengers were on deck at the time, and, with a part of the crew, are all lost.

Gen. Banks' Movements.

RESULT OF HIS SUCCESSES.

The correspondent of the Boston Journal who is accompanying Gen. BANKS' army, writes:

"Some 400 prisoners were taken by Gen. WESTFEL on his expedition, and nearly a hundred by Gen. GREENE. Most of these have been sent to New-Orleans. Among them were Capt. JEWETT, One Hundred and Sixtieth New-York, and Lieut. ALLEN, of Gen. WESTFEL'S staff, who were taken on board of the Diana by the rebels as they were making a reconnoissance with a company of men by Gen. WESTFEL'S order. Both were wounded, and escaped from the fact of their being on board the Cersey with the rebel wounded. When the Diana was blown up it is reported that two transports were destroyed, and all that saved the Cersey from a like destruction was the precious cargo on board.

It has been ascertained from reliable sources, that the rebel army was composed of the following troops: The Fourth, Fifth and Seventh Texas mounted rifles, the Twenty-eighth Louisiana, (the 'Crescent' regiment of Shiloh memory,) the Eighteenth Louisiana, FOLMAN'S, CLACK'S, WITHER'S and the Arizona battalions, and WALKER'S, SEMMES', the Pelican and St. Mary's batteries. The rebel loss in killed and wounded approximates to our own; while we have, from various sources, taken over a regiment of prisoners, some of them officers of high rank, including one Brigadier-General.

At the present writing our army has reached New-Iberia, having experienced little opposition, the enemy fleeing as our army advanced.

The result is glorious. We have opened to trade, and to the healthy growth of the Union sentiment, one of the finest tracts of land the deadly upas ever cast over overshadowed. The best plantations in this State are in this district, and the people are intelligent, kind and humane, and the institutions are would about all become unequivocally loyal, if the degrading rebel influence could be kept from them. We have heard DAVIS and BENJAMIN denounced largely by these people, even while they bolster the Confederacy on abstract principle.

Gen. BANKS is above New-Iberia, driving everything before him."

A PATRIOTIC LETTER.

FORT HEADQUARTERS, HELENA, Ark., March 31, 1863.

M. H. Carpenter, Esq., Milwaukee, Wis.:

SIR: I have read with so much satisfaction your letter upon the subject of the duty of the Democratic party in the present crisis of our national affairs, that I venture to express the hope that all may see the subject exactly as you have so powerfully expressed it. Using your manner of disposing of the points of objection is so clear and so eminently adapted to the crisis, that no successful reply can be made.

The South set the house on fire; you and I were lodging in its apartments, and must stand by with inexcusable indifference and see the edifice utterly destroyed, or manfully try to extinguish the flames. How utterly destructive is the policy of calling a jury to try and convict the incendiary before the house is saved. Before half the witnesses can be examined the edifice will be in ashes.

We must not allow anybody to make peace, until all the Secessionists resume their original "status" under the old flag and old Constitution.

And whether the status of the local institutions of the South is to be preserved or not, depends greatly on the duration of the war. All military decrees of the President must be understood as a means to accomplish the end—a restoration of the Union as it was. The object of the Government in prosecuting the war has been officially declared by Congress. The proclamation of the President declaring the blockade of our ports, and emancipating the slaves in the insurrectionary States are only means to the end.

If we keep out supplies and munitions of war by the external blockade, and if we can effectually keep up internal blockade on these States by keeping the enemy from planting, reaping and sowing supplies at home, the war must soon end. If the Emancipation Proclamation withdraws twenty-five or fifty thousand laborers from their fields and internal productions, or from their fortifications and rifle-pits, it is active and effectual means to the desired end.

In my judgment we ought to capture as contraband of war every effective negro in the insurgent States that we can reach, and hold them as a means of weakening the enemy and closing the war. In fact, every objection to the President's proclamation can just be settled after an honorable peace.

All ideas of peace with the States in active rebellion are delusive at present. The lamented DOUGLAS, with prophetic judgment, gave us the true idea of this war, when he said "the surest road to peace is the most stupendous preparation for war." I would urge our Democratic friends from one end of the North to the other to adopt this as their motto, and it will prove "bread cast upon the waters," to be found "after many days." Let us have our patriotism in our works; any other course is weakness and madness, as I view it.

We all want peace; but when it comes the whole Union must come with it. We are near the hour of our final success, I firmly believe. With the capture or occupation of Vicksburgh by our forces, peace must and will speedily come.

I am, with respect, your obedient servant,

W. A. GORMAN,

Brigadier-General United States Volunteers.

The Late Gen. H. McClellan.

From the Richmond Whig, April 21.

Young Napoleon is dead—dead beyond resurrection. In the flesh, he may still walk (he earth; but in the spirit, in power, in the hope of glory, he is defunct. It is a noteworthy fact that the blunderbuss and hulaballoos over this person have ceased in Yankee land. For two or three months after his dismissal, he was the pet object of Democratic pity and "Conservative" sympathy; but now even Beast BUTLER has grander ovations than he. His name is seldom heard among men. He is no more.

A review of his career, from the time he claimed ROSECRANS' laurels in the little affair at Rich Mountain, down to the time of the battle of Antietam, would be instructive to the nation of liars who accepted him at his own lying valuation, and discarded him because his falsehoods, gigantic as they were, produced no visible impression on the rebellion. It might also profit the Confederacy to trace, in the career of this braggart, the overruling Power which has never failed to darken the counsels of the wicked, and to cause all things to work together for good in behalf of the just cause. Nothing is easier of proof than that the elevation of McClellan to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the Yankee army, was all that was needed after the election of Lincoln, to insure our independence. The recital of a few facts will show how greatly we are indebted to him.

In October, 1861, he had 190,000 men, and the most overwhelming array of field artillery that had ever been seen on this Continent. Before him was an army of 40,000 Confederates, occupying Mason's and Munson's Hills, and defiantly daring him to come outside of his fortifications. The roads were good, the weather splendid; he had but to advance in force to gain an easy victory. So, at least, thought his master, LINCOLN. But he knew his men were cowards, and he was afraid of his reputation. He did not want to fight; he sought merely to push us from one position to another by dint of enormous numbers. Hence the flank movement by way of Leesburgh, which ended so horribly and benumbed him with fright for three months.

Driven, by an imperative order to advance again, in spite of the Winter mud, he entered the intrenched camp of Manassas only to find it a mass of smouldering ruins.

He whipped around to the Peninsula, taking 112,000 men with him. Magruder opposed him with but 7,500 men, kept him in check, and forced him to the epoch and finish of the famous seven days. His hands clean, and in due time accomplished his retreat from the battle of Williamsburgh followed. His advance was whipped by JOHNSTON'S rear-guard, but, owing partly to the ignorance of the country and to the bad handling of some of our troops, he was enabled to gain enough advantage on his wing to put some consid into his men. He acknowledged, however, that, at one time, it looked as if the Rail Road route would be cracked again.

After this battle an event occurred, which has been forgotten, but deserves now to be recalled. A Confederate Surgeon, left in charge of the wounded, told McCLELLAN that his gunboats might possibly reach Richmond, but that infantry never could. The little Napoleon smiled as if in pity of the Surgeon's ignorance. The Surgeon told him further, that the Abolitionists were making a tool of him, and that they would throw him aside, proclaim a general emancipation of the negroes and put an Abolitionist in his place. McCLELLAN replied he was in no fear of the Abolitionists, so long as he had command of that army; "but," he added, "if they do throw me aside, and set the negroes free, I shall go to Europe and cease to have anything to do with the war."

How literally the Surgeon's predictions have been fulfilled. McCLELLAN is kicked out of office, the insurrection proclamation has been issued, HOOKER, a pure blooded Abolitionist, has command of the Army of the Potomac, and—it has not been two weeks since McCLELLAN, in a public speech, urged the people to sustain LINCOLN. How debased the creature is! Why is he not in Europe, and why does he longer live here, except in hopes of a new appointment under the abolition despotism?

* * * His bombastic dispatches from Western Virginia secured his elevation; his reputation was founded on lies; in lies he towered, and under lies he fell, crushed. How he contrived for us that he was chosen chief of the Yankee army. With the immense numbers at his command, an officer of truth, courage, enterprise and daring would have pushed us out. But he was in awe of his dishonest repute; his lies made him a coward, and from the first to the last day of his military career he did not dare, on a single occasion, to expose himself to fire. A mendacious, dastardly boaster, he perished so unmanfully that the ridiculousness of his last moments destroys every vestige of obligation conferred by his vainglorious pretensions.
